

Praise for The Book of Animals

"Archangel Michael is at it again and I am so grateful! Through Kelly Hampton he has written another book, The Book of Animals, to help the world population understand and heal the animals on the planet! I enjoy the wisdom he shared, including the Harmonic Codes which will be so helpful, and are easy to use! I also appreciate the list of steps he gives to help our companion pets through this Ascension energy shift. I could go on and on, there is so much of value and good use in this book! I know all who read it will enjoy and be blessed!" —Qia Jenae, Chicago, IL

"Wow! A wonderful book on the teaching of not only on how to open and expand our awareness to animals, but how we can directly assist them with ease and grace. In THE BOOK OF ANIMALS: Healing Wisdom from Archangel Michael by Kelly Hampton, Archangel Michael gently guides us by mixing narrative and prayer to help aid our understanding. After reading his words I am uplifted and filled with excitement for what is to come. A must read for anyone who is seeking a way to heal and expand love to our beloved Earth." —Tracy Redford, Fenton, MI

“Written in the same powerful, poignant prose as Kelly's last two books, Archangel Michael's voice (through Kelly) resounds through these pages with clarity and purpose. He gently educates readers about the animal kingdom - past, present, and future - to help us understand, connect with, and heal these profoundly sensitive, loving beings. He continues his teachings on such essential topics as Ascension, Mother Earth, underground civilizations, intergalactic ancestors, Atlantis, harmonic codes, and energy healing while revealing many surprising truths about land, air, and marine animals. Finally, we learn the answers to many of our burning questions. What really happened to the dinosaurs? How can we help animals on the brink of extinction? How do animals find their way back home over great distances? And, most importantly, what can we do to help our animal friends during this great time of Ascension? These answers and many more, lie within.” —Chelsea J., California

We hope you enjoy this book divinely shared with

Kelly

by

Archangel Michael

Other Products by Kelly Hampton

BOOKS

Into the White Light: The Revelations of Archangel Michael

2012 and Beyond: The Truth from Archangel Michael

Ascended Spaces™ for Creating Abundance

AUDIO/CD/PDF PROGRAMS

Understanding Rainbow, Indigo, Crystalline, Atlantean

Children (audio MP3)

The Power of Love and Kindness (audio MP3)

The Power of Joy (audio MP3)

The Power of Peace and Calm (audio MP3)

The Power of Gratitude (audio MP3)

The Power of Creative Visualization (audio MP3)

Harmonic Codes to Connect with the Angels (PDF)
Healing Harmonic Codes to Connect with the Fairy Realm
(PDF)

Dominion Vol. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6: The New Astrology System from Archangel Michael (audio MP3s)

Time Travel (audio MP3)

Alchemy Series (audio MP3s)

Celestial Tapestries Vol. 1 & 2 (audio MP3s)

Rainbow Falls (audio MP3)

Protection Ascension Pod Cast (audio MP3)

Mother Earth Ascendancy (audio MP3)

Holographic Matrixes for Healing (audio MP3)

Gentle Giant Spiritual Teaching (audio MP3)

2012 and Beyond Vol. 1 & 2 (audio from lectures)

Super Foods and Their Value (audio MP3)

8 Spiritual Laws of the Universe (audio MP3)

Creating Heaven on Earth Series (audio MP3s)

Divine Feminine Series (audio MP3s)

Spiritual Protection (audio MP3)

Holiday Message from Christ, Sound Healing (audio MP3)

All of the above may be ordered by visiting:

Kelly's web site: www.kelly-hampton.com

Books through www.amazon.com/Balboapress.com

Archangel Michael guides us with love and humor

THE BOOK OF ANIMALS

Healing Wisdom from Archangel Michael

Vol. 1

Kelly Hampton

Copyright © 2016 by Kelly Hampton

Cover Design by The Turning Mill

Unless otherwise noted in credits, photographs are through Adobe Stock and Pixabay.com. Images on Pixabay are released under Creative Commons CC0. To the extent possible under law, up loaders of Pixabay have waived their copyright and related or neighboring rights to these images.

All attempts have been made to credit the source of all images, to secure and abide by copyright policies. Kelly Hampton shall not be liable for any misrepresentation of images or information to you or any other person(s) contained in this text.

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be used or reproduced by any means, graphic, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, taping, or by any information storage retrieval system without written permission of the author except in case of brief quotations embodied in critical articles and reviews. Because of the dynamic nature of the Internet, any web addresses or links contained in this book may have changed since publication and may no longer be valid. The views expressed in this work are those solely of the author and do not necessarily reflect the views of the publisher, and the publisher disclaims any responsibility for them.

ISBN 978-1-63110-205-9 Paperback

ISBN 978-1-63110-207-3 Ebook-epub

ISBN 978-1-63110-208-0 Ebook-mobi

The author of this book does not dispense medical advice or prescribe the use of any technique as a form of treatment. The intent of the author is only to offer information of a general nature to help you or your animals in your quest for spiritual and emotional well-being. In the event you use any information in this book for yourself or your animals, which is your constitutional right, the author and publisher assume no responsibility for your actions.

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be used or reproduced by any means, graphic, electronic, or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, taping, or by any information storage retrieval system without written permission of the author, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical articles and reviews.

Printed by Mira Digital Publishing in the United States of America

*This book is dedicated to all the incredible creatures in our universe, to those new species on their way yet to be discovered, and to Archangel Michael,
my constant, beloved companion who asked me many years ago to step into my shoes.*

A prayer for all those on your planet:

“I am perfect in every way.

Even when I may be presented with some information which I do not understand, I find perfection in my questioning.”—Archangel Michael

Contents

Acknowledgments	i
Introduction	iii
1. Healing the Core of Mother Earth	1
2. In the Beginning	23
3. Animals of the Water	35
4. Domesticated Animals of the Land	79
5. Birds of Land and Air	129
6. Wild Animals	169
7. Mythical Creatures & Animals in Other Dimensions	200
Final Angelic Thoughts	219
Credits	227
About the Author	229
Are You Missing Out?	231

Acknowledgments

My deepest appreciation for Catherine Cogorno's help in putting this book together, and whose determination to elevate the planet continues to motivate me. To the many loving individuals who submitted their questions to Archangel Michael I am grateful. Thank you also to Turning Mill Graphics for designing a beautiful cover, to Chelsea Jennings and Patti Ransford for doing a wonderful job of editing. To everyone else who contributed with their support in some way you have my heartfelt thanks. To all the animals near and far for enriching our lives in so many ways, I hope to see 1/10th of you in this exalted life.

INTRODUCTION

Archangel Michael: Before any book or any type of teaching can be done describing the entire animal kingdom in a way that perhaps has not been done before, it will be useful to lay aside all preconceived notions and teachings—or at least, I might say, many of them which each of you may have lovingly learned or thought you learned about the animal kingdom. I am not saying that many of you do not have truths about loving the animal kingdom, nor am I saying that I plan to overturn all of Creation. I am merely stating, much as I have done in every other teaching book Kelly and I have co-created, that first we must have an understanding: that what I share with you now is shared with the highest, most loving vibration that typed words can convey as they vibrate:

God created all things large and small. God/Infinite Mind created an internal combustion engine called Mother Earth to house one-tenth of the living organisms known in your world as animals.

One-tenth. Your planet houses one-tenth of the living organisms in the complete cosmos.

Pause and reflect upon this.

Therefore, since your expectations perhaps are that this is a teaching about Earthly animals, we must early on share that we will attempt to examine only a partial of all the known animals. One other item—I speak for the collective consciousness of Archangels. Does each of you know what that is? It simply means that I am choosing at times to say, “I feel,” and at other times, “we feel,” and that it is simply the total invocation of all the angels ranked as Archangels.

It is useful to understand that there are multiple dimensions, for those of you who have not read my wisdom in 2012 and Beyond: The Truth from Archangel Michael or Into the White Light: The Revelations of Archangel Michael. Why? Because when we speak of a great book of animals we cannot do so without understanding various dimensions. The Archangels like me reside on the fifth dimension as the lowest dimension and, of course, can reside in multiple dimensions higher than this. Said another way, the 5th dimension is pure love. It is also useful to know this as it relates to animals and our teaching of them. The 5th dimensional pure love is the vibration which is coming to your Mother Earth. She too, has messages for each of you before our work together in this book is through.

I have great compassion for each and every one of you whose eyes and ears may be devouring this text and care about the animal world as much as I do. I am Archangel Michael.

I am pleased and honored myself to present a large body of teaching. It is my hope that next we construct one of the largest, most meaningful books about the plant kingdom ever created: The Book of Plants. You see, mankind isn't the only form of life which has been and will continue to be elevated into the 5th dimension pure love vibration! It will be and in some places is already comprised of every living thing on your planet. For some, the information or spiritual wisdom about the healing powers of the jaguar or lemur may not interest you as much as learning about the healing powers of the common grey mouse or a house cat. But I say this to you now: all things large and small matter in the kingdom. Whose kingdom? The eternal kingdom of God/Infinity/Allah/God Mind/Source/All That Is.

Through love Mother Earth will continue to heal

CHAPTER ONE

Healing the Core of Mother Earth

Where we left off was at the beginning, so the beginning shall become the end. In other words, as we say these things to each of you who are reading or hearing this information, we propose that you pull up a chair and wrap yourselves in your favorite blanket and invite your children to kneel at your feet, and I will do my best to try to unfold and unravel one of the greatest stories ever told—and that's the story of creation, particularly animal creation.

This does not mean for a moment or second that I proclaim to be myself as God. However, like you, I have been created in the image of God's Infinite Mind, the one Supreme Being. But, I do intend to do my absolute highest work to make this teaching to seem very much like a story. All of the best teachings are stories. And so I hope you find what ensues in the following pages of the information to be enlightening, at times perhaps troubling, at times perhaps awe-inspiring, majestic, horrifying, enveloping, developing all of your senses. So, if there is something stated that does incense you, I would ask each and every one of you to stand up and take peaceful action so that if it's proper-sized tears that you find forming from the knowledge that a particular species or set of species or animals might likely be extinct, or that you find your blood pressure rising slightly, or your joy quota is diminishing—rise up! Rise up and do something collectively!

I'd like to insert a prayer before going into the core material on healing Mother Earth, Gaia. Whenever two or more souls come together with the same common intent, same common thinking, same common prayer, and same common anything, it magnifies the power. So, if you are reading the book, and you have some loved ones gathered around you or maybe you even have your own pets snuggled around you as they have telepathic knowing, they will be reacting when you are reading the words, and the words may inspire you, and collectively the smaller pets will feel what you are feeling.

The prayer I feel will be beautiful to begin with is simply this:

“Every day I have a choice to make. I have a choice to be living and contributing to the sustainability of my Mother, Mother Earth. Or, I have a choice to do something toward her destruction. Either knowingly or unknowingly, I choose sustainability.”

That is all, nothing more.

With that said, moving into laying the foundation, I feel as though we very well cannot talk about the life forms on Earth, specifically animals of all sizes, shapes, colors, and dimensions either once on the planet, now on the planet, or on the planet in the future, without honoring the host. As introduced in the prayer just a few moments ago, Mother Earth, Gaia, would like to offer some of her teaching, so I will step aside and allow her to do so and I will be rejoining you in just a moment.

Mother Earth:

I am who you might say I am, might think I am. You might think of me as your mother, you might think of me as feminine Goddess energy, you might think of me as femininity. Who am I? I am the voice of the energy of the Mother who holds all forms of life upon her; upon her oceans, upon her lands, upon her skies. In your planetary system I am known as Mother Earth. In other constellations and other universes I am known by other names. My teaching is simple. It is very basic. If you can imagine that I have a collective consciousness like you do, then you can believe that this is true—that there are vessels on Earth who can tap into frequencies and share these frequencies with you. So, my message is simply stated: be pure of intent. It sounds very simple. Be pure of intent. What does that mean? It means that if you are fishing from my waters, be clear of intent. If you are mining from my belly, from my land, be clear of intent. If you are doing anything that involves the soil, the water, the air you breathe, be pure of intent and the purest of intent that is mandatory. Do your minds want to guess what this might be?

Be intent upon love. Yes, it is that simple.

It is not a whole lot different than anything else you may do in any other part of your lives. In fact, it shouldn't be. It should be the same. The same energy that flows through the middle of my core—the middle of my knowingness, the middle of everything—flows through you in a similar fashion, and that flows through every living, breathing organism. Even the most feared and hated venomous snake, even the most feared and hated wild jackal has love as their infinite being-ness. The healing that the angel was speaking of when he mentioned "laying the foundation of the healing my core", he is talking about the healing of the atrocities--that mankind's actions have created, especially in the last 500 years. In many ways, some of the atrocities that fell outside of the vibration of love by mankind were not purely done by mankind alone, and some of these atrocities were also done by those from other dimensions. I honor and give grace to Archangel Michael for talking briefly here about dimensions; other dimensions, other universes, so that your minds can start to begin to understand what I am saying.

Many of you know this as you know your names—that there are multiple intelligent life forms that have visited me for thousands upon thousands of years, and some of them have left their imprint. Like a dirty shoe might leave an imprint, an energetic one; in some cases a real dirty shoeprint by scalding my land in some fashion, my soil, leaching away rich nutrients and so on; scarring and digging away at the copper and iron ore mines so that many of the underground civilizations that do exist underground (yes, they do exist underground) had to be rebuilt. You may wonder, "Well, she has presented several things one, the idea of underground tunnels and two, that something had to be rebuilt. Three, what does this have to do with anything on top of the Earth, you might say? And four, nefarious beings." If your family is gathered around your feet and you are on a patio or a porch or outside on Mother Earth, thinking that the family is going to be enlightened with a book that's like a child's encyclopedia about the diet of the woolly mammoth, it's not going to be quite like that. But this will be a teaching and a presentation like everything which carries a vibration of love. As I speak for myself, it does little service to spend too much time devoted to anything that falls outside of love and spend too much time speaking about nefarious beings. But in the context of how my soul was wounded, I myself had multiple implants from those outside of love like splinters in your finger. If you have ever gotten a splinter in any part of your body, but especially in your finger, that is very much what the implants felt like to me. Injurious. Irritating. Not belonging. That is why some have called me, Mother Earth, for the longest time the Dark Planet; because of these various implants and other scalding that mankind himself has done.

To my way of knowing—and I do not profess to be any closer to the idolization of God, Infinite Mind, Holy Creator than Archangel Michael is—I am not stating that everyone on Earth damaged my soil, overgrazed land, overfished my waters, or did any number of a thousand different catastrophic challenging actions to the well-being of the animal kingdom that lives upon me and lived upon me. I am just saying that it is something that existed and, largely in my time here, my role as I see it is to provide a loving foundation. With the passage of the dates 11/11/2012, 12/12/2012, and 12/21/2012 the last splinter was removed.

Are you wondering how does Mother Earth remove a splinter? I belched it out. It is quite a bit of movement in the Earth's tectonic plates anyway. As many of you know, some of you live on top of some of the largest fault lines, so you are very aware of what I am talking about on some level. But what I am saying to you is that the last splinter on that date, that last date mentioned, was actually a seismic eruption. I mean it quite literally—that the belching was an eruption. So, now the time of rebuilding nirvana is ours at hand. Yes, of course there are those on Earth that still by their own thoughtlessness, their malice, or intendedness outside of love do things that strip and rob the life force energy from living organisms of necessary and vital elements, but their numbers are lessening.

In continuing, from the intent or perspective of pure love, there is no point in a text like this where the focus is largely on the magnificent animal kingdom from the past, present, and future, to go into the atrocities mankind from all dimensions have harbored upon my soul. It is simply a new dawn; a new age; a new beginning. For the uninitiated, the core in my belly is crystalline in nature. There are two significant crystalline cores that vibrate in tandem and correspond to your magnetic fields of clockwise and counter clockwise, with multiple and multiple and multiple bands extending outside of these two major cores. It's a bit like looking inside of a tennis ball, if you have ever looked inside of a tennis ball or golf ball, that's solid all the way through and has an inner weaving. That is very much like the magnetic fields; there are multiple magnetic fields but within my core belly.

I suppose it would be useful to share some more wisdom about my comment about underground tunnels so as not to leave any of you wondering. The splinters as I mentioned did at one time cause the need to repair some underground tunnels, more like burrows perhaps. If your minds are wondering, “Well, what are you speaking of?” I say to you very much as Archangel Michael and many of the higher councils of the angelic realm, any of the elementals, many of those of the spirit world, the leaders of the high holy ones know that there are places underneath your feet that have had entire civilizations, and still do, operating 5th dimensional energy type work. That would include the underground oceanographic tunnels. Perhaps tunneling might imply an above the ground tunnel but it is not so much a linear concept. If you are visualizing these underground cities rather than mere tunnels, because that is what they are, as cities or civilizations teeming with life that have been hidden from mankind’s knowingness for thousands of years, the veil of secrecy is gradually coming off as the vibration of love fully embraces my consciousness once again, as well as yours.

What do your magnificent minds think?

The scientists who may be reading this might be thinking this simply cannot be so, either from a moral standpoint or an intellectual one, or just a purely physics one. How can tunnels be created in molten rock and lava? I say to you that they are, they were, and they will be well into the future for the purpose of supporting 5th dimensional or higher healing, because that's really why the angel invoked me to come into this part of our time together, as the source of healing my final wounds. And like your physical body, many of my wounds have been internal. Yes, I have outside, outward, superficial wounds, those are the ones we described, and there are the ones you see with your own eyes and have witnessed. When a forest is cut down, deforested in such a way that all life forms and the tall giants like the Redwoods and Sequoias (which are crystal connectors) are denigrated, these are wounds. There are endless, countless examples of my wounding through mankind's existence here.

Suffice to say that I, too, have had wounds inside, often internal wounds that you can't really see unless you fully examine them. But you know that something isn't right. Sometimes internal healing takes longer than external healing. In keeping with the scope of this work, we are talking about the Infinite Creator having as many life forces keeping my poles on their axes. Just as though you may think of this in your minds, your own body has internal ways of keeping your internal organs working well; those of you who are physicians out there will know many of these ways. But, let's talk about bacteria, good bacteria that your body makes to ward off an infection—that's very much like what I am trying to describe here to each of you that these underground tunnels and civilizations (also underwater) are working to keep me whole.

Archangel Michael:

It is very wise guidance indeed from our Mother. If you are wondering where this is going or you are wondering in your minds, “Where is the teaching of Father Sky? Mother Earth and Father Sky, I’ve heard of these things said before; I know of them myself.” I say to you we simply have not gotten there yet, as Mother Earth represents land and the ocean and the prairies and the deserts and the mazes and so on, in a great majestic beauty. That is the time that I ask each and every one of you to reflect back for a moment over the last few years of your life, over the last few weeks of your life, and see what you might have done in your daily lives in regard to Mother Earth. How have you harmed her and how you may have helped her? No one needs to see your thinking; if you want to make a list by all means go ahead and do so. It is not for public show, but ask your minds this. I think you will be surprised with what you come up with.

It is not my intent to fall outside of the frequency of love either and make anyone feel guilt or shame. Everything begins with intent and focus and refocusing; re-direction is often necessary, as is education and persuasion. I simply suggest that you ask yourselves what you may have done that either robbed Mother Earth’s sustainability or supported her, and then make a determined intent to lessen and limit any of the things you did that stripped away from her the vital Earth force. For without a healthy planet, we can only imagine what life would be like here. It is true that every living thing has an energy force, and I ask each and every one of you to be grateful for Mother Earth’s attempts to remove the imprinting of bloody wars and decades and decades of hatred and violence, street violence—it doesn't necessarily need to be global wars, any of mankind's atrocities—man against man, where blood was shed on her soil and left an imprint, layer upon layer through the energetic fields, blood and hatred and violence and war and justice, jealousy, fighting, greed.

This creates holes in the energetic wrapping around the Earth that can also extend to the closest layers to the Earth, which are only about two inches from the soil, the top of the soil. So, very lovingly think about Mother Earth as your Mother, and think about a Mother that has raised and sustained you, who has been plundered, beaten down, attacked, and never once folded her arms, lowered her head, buried her head, hidden from you or said, "I'm simply not going to go on." Or worse, "I am going to turn my anger inward or outward and cause a cataclysmic rift," because she could have.

I must say this, as I feel compelled that when the last blood is shed on planet Earth, total liberation is what will be felt as an energetic shockwave not only across your planet, but across all of the interstellar dimensions thousands and thousands of light years away. There are many, many, many, many, many, many thousands of light workers of all ages and descriptions. Many of their children are working to this end presently by every loving thing they say and do, every loving connection they have, every loving thought they may have by not eating meat, harming an animal, harming a tree, harming anything; harming, harming, harming their Mother must stop. Mother Earth is rising from this wounded, splintered state that she has been in for thousands of years to an exalted place of total being as a golden goblet. Imagine Mother Earth as a golden ball which is highly charged, highly loving, highly exalted as a magnificent creation of God's Infinite Source energy restoring her to her rightful place.

I have an exercise for all: think about and do at least five things that will support and sustain and propel forward the healing of your Mother. Bring this exercise as close to home as you want it to be. If you have not written to your own mother a letter,—a love letter, a thank you letter—bring it into your homes and your hearts and do so with your mothers and your grandmothers and all of the female goddesses in your lives, because Mother Earth very much represents Goddess energy. Do it all. Act upon ways that your magnificent loving minds and hearts can go about improving, healing the wounds that still exist within your Mother, and then at the close of the day sit in reflection and ask yourself how you are feeling for having done so, and then do it again and again and again and again.

Before we move onward to create a teaching about animals, we must spend time honoring their home. Now, for those of any and all ages, here is another hallmark assignment. I lovingly ask each of you to consider writing down on a piece of paper—or if it is not paper because we can talk about where paper comes from and recycling of paper, the reusability of things and so on and so forth—take your voice if you wish, head out to your Mother (that would be outside), go to your favorite place if you wish, go to a convenient place if you wish, and thank her for who she is, and what her feminine energy—her Goddess energy, her loving heart, her own resourcefulness—has provided you with.

Use your words to tell her, “I am thankful” for anything and everything that comes to your mind and your heart. “I am thankful for the beautiful wildflowers that grow down the street from my home. I am thankful for blessing us with clear, fresh water.” Even if you know in some places in the world the water is not clean and fresh, by stating it in this way and putting these energy molecules into motion, or in essence, you are allowing those molecules to form and be sent to the water in the here and now. This is not an exercise in denial. In other words, I am not asking your minds to think of the dirtiest river and say in a mocking way, “Thank you, Mother.” Get down on your knees if it moves you, kneel and honor, reach down with your hands and grab some soil. “Thank you, Mother, for providing me with green grass that I enjoy, the smell of green grass, for providing soil that is nutrient-rich enough after all of the degradation that has been done here, to still sustain plants and animals for my enjoyment and my enrichment.”

These are examples of what your spirit may be moved to say, and say it in gratitude. Some of you may weep and do it again and again, because every living thing has knowingness and has intelligence. That means everything that was created has intelligence. I ask each of you to kindly think about making this a routine, a sacred ceremony if you will; anything can be sacred. Some of you I feel will make it sacred in the way that you say the words. Others of you will make it sacred that you follow a tradition or a teaching or learning. In other words, it becomes special when you go with intent to offer gratitude.

Mother Earth:

With that being said, we were talking about the belching of the splinter, and the splinter being some atrocities too numerous to mention—not worthy of mention, but heralded as one of the largest events of all of cosmic history, also the final belching on 12/21/2012. Moving forward in the context of our teaching together as I have been called upon to do this, I, the feminine energy, I, the feminine Mother, I, the Mother Earth, Gaia, welcome this opportunity to teach and share from my perspective. If reading these words are unfamiliar to you, let it be. So much has been written about the angelic realm, and of course, the holy masters of all religions—and I mean this from all the love of my heart—then for many thousands of generations, lowly old Mother Earth, if someone thought of Mother Earth at all. I do have a consciousness.

I do have a voice. I do have a message. I am an organic creation. I was created by the God Force Infinite Being—all that is, all that is everything. I might speak more globally now, as a collection of sisterly planets might be useful for your understanding before launching into more of the animal kingdom—because this is largely a book about the animal kingdom, past, present, and future—that from my perspective I see myself as a planet, I see myself as a sister among sisters.

If you are following what I am saying, I very much feel as though there are other female planets in various solar systems largely as I know it to be. Most of the planets carry more feminine energy than masculine energy. I might say to imagine me as a sister among sisters, visualize me this way—imagine me to be this way so you are comfortable with my message, comfortable enough to absorb not only what is being presented but also the changes I would like to see made upon the planet. After all, it is my planet. I feel as though we have a symbiotic relationship. This is nothing new, but what is new is the number of souls that resonate upon me, the surface of the Earth, that carry a loving vibration encoded in their DNA.

I know my friend Archangel Michael will not be able to talk about a book on animals without talking about the upgraded DNA in them. So, I determined it a part of my job to lay the foundation in your minds as it pertains to the human population. Of course DNA cannot be upgraded in the animal kingdom and not the plant kingdom, and in the plant kingdom and not the humankind kingdom, and so on. Am I being clear? This upgrade has to do with the elevation of my frequency which will support new forms of life, and it already is, to which I am sure the angel will speak in greater detail. I do believe that he has shared with me that his ultimate plan is to go through at least 3,500 animals, animal by animal, and share their wisdom. So, if this excites you (we hope it does), by all means smile, and if those of you say, “Oh, my, too many animals!” I say that the number he has determined is only about one-tenth of all of the animals within the animal kingdom past, present, and future, and that itself may be an understatement.

You see if he determines in his infinite wisdom to share with each and every one of you his vision of animals on the other side—the other side that we might call the 5th dimensional Heaven component—then the angel in his infinite wisdom might be guiding you to rainbow-colored unicorns and the like. I feel as though the reminder of my contribution in this text is to be uplifting, to be encouraging, to be grateful, for each and every one of you who walk upon my soil do so with a higher vibration based upon love that has been implanted either into your DNA, or some of you simply find it in your hearts to be more loving. And, by the way, this loving energy pours through the soles of your feet through the topsoil, down through the surface of my planetary being-ness. If you can imagine that this energetic imprint of crystalline pure love extends from the feet of those who carry the love vibration hundreds of miles below the surface closer to the core of my magnetic fields, this is exactly what is occurring.

The difference if I am being clear with everyone is that it was not until recently that the depth of the love vibration was able to seep that deeply. If any of you are familiar with the concept the world calls “runoff,” when there is too much rain and it runs off my body, imagine how it used to be all over the planet, when we would examine if anyone would talk about the love vibration or the love particularization being a part of me. Much of it simply ran off. There was too much blood in the soil and not enough love. Now graciously, the paradigm has shifted and there is more love than fear; more love than blood. It may be useful to spend more time speaking about the importance of being barefoot and walking upon my soil. If some of your minds are wondering, “Well, if the energy of love flows through our feet, through our heads from Source down through our physical bodies, through our feet down to you, Mother Earth, what are you giving us?” Notice I said some of you may be thinking this, and it is a very interesting concept which I would like to speak of; it’s a circuit. Definitely, it is not a one way linear type energy flow, it’s a circuit. So, when the love vibration flows from your Creator through your physical body, it flows through your feet, down through the soles of your feet, down past my surface into my inner core (every year after this transmission, the love vibration will be penetrating deeper into my inner core, like your inner belly).

I, too, have a belly button, and it is called my inner core, my sacred middle. My sacred center, it is purely crystalline in nature. That is why it is so important to spend a moment educating about crystalline energy, pure 5th dimensional energy. It is an extension of each of you, as it is an extension to your teaching to know that when we use words like “ascended,” “made more whole,” “returning back to pure love,” “5th dimensional energies,” that you understand that these words and concepts are interchangeable as they relate to the inner and outer crystalline core that is considered my inner belly. This energy flows through Source, through you if you are standing outside (not standing on a manmade structure), and pours down into my belly. Imagine in your minds a watershed or a storehouse, if you will--a flowing river of purified, crystal energy. Then imagine in your minds clear, flowing water that sparkles in an iridescent way.

That would be very close to what I would be asking you to imagine when we are thinking about this crystalline watershed. Once inside the watershed, if you are still imagining this with me, all of your thoughts of love collect there, pool there, build there, store there, but are not kept there. The watershed itself isn’t linear, it doesn’t have a plateau. In other words, it’s not like a piece of paper. It’s not a two-dimensional concept. That watershed has no dimension; it has all dimensions. It flows out, seeps out in all and every direction, almost like a water sprinkler from there, and rises back up. If you are imagining this visualization, it seeps back out in other places through my soil. The particles of the crystalline energy then rise up back to Source and the whole process starts over again. It’s a bit like osmosis that you may have learned in sixth grade science, if you were paying attention in class. (Angel smile).

The concept is very similar and, in fact, it is not separate from this one: osmosis, absorption. Isn't it wonderful to know that love is received and absorbed and spread—that's how powerful love is! What makes this newsworthy is that because my soil has been elevated and I have belched out the last splinter, I have become restored back to what some are calling my original status and I am no longer the Dark Planet! It is very easy for the loving energy to be pushed back up through the soil. It takes acts of great force if you can imagine, ask any gardener or any farmer who has ever tried to grow anything in soil that wasn't receptive; they will tell you what back-breaking work it can be. If I am being a good teacher, each of you should be having the understanding now that because of the passage of 12/21/2012, it is easier now than ever before for the frequencies of love to come back up through the soil and the root system—very, very easily.

I have so much to share with you! Yet, at the same time, because this is a book of animals and not a book about plants nor a book of multiple cosmos and constellations, asteroids, interstellar dimensional travel, and further examinations, I think I will bring our time together to a close by speaking to the shamans of the world. Shamans are not different from anyone else, or separate from anything else that we have been talking about as it relates to love vibration and general global matters, or when it comes to healing Mother Earth. I would very much like to single out all the shamans of the world who have laid a foundation from much of the new healing work to be brought forth. For those of you who may not be familiar with the word “shaman,” I see that no matter what culture or what country you are living in, to me a shaman is someone who understands the interconnectedness of life. The study of this is often referred to as shamanism. Every land mass, every country on Earth has a version of this. I mean the study of the interconnectedness—the web, the spider web of life—plant, animal, mineral, nutrient.

The messages contain threads that weave a tapestry of the interconnectedness between all living, breathing things, which is understood by these individuals. Shaman is simply a word to help us understand the category generally for this person with this interconnectedness; knowing someone who knows my fruits and berries, knows my animals, knows my soil, knows my water, knows my air, knows my mineral kingdom almost as well as I do. It is to the shamans of the planet that I would like to speak and thank now.

To the shamans of the world I say this:

Without your inner knowing, without your praise, without your strength, without your courage, there would have been many more blood-stained particles keeping the vibration of me, Mother Earth down. Some will be jumping in with their minds and hearts and saying, “Well, I’m not a Shaman. I don’t even know what you are speaking of, Gaia but, I know the land.” I would say to you, yes. Many know the land. There are many servants of the land now; before thousands and thousands of years ago, the first nomads were servants of the land. There are many ways to be a servant of my soil, of my collective soil, and I am not omitting these souls who are thinking, “Why didn’t our Mother say something about the stewards of the land, something that I understand?” I say, dear ones, that you are wrapped into this bundle, but there is more Earthly wisdom than simply the land, the soil, and the nutrients. It involves the integration and the understanding of every living thing in this web of life; of course including animals, the plant kingdom, and so on.

About 1,300 years ago, something happened—does anyone want to take a guess at what it was?

The first nuclear-fused bomb was created. What does this have to do with shamanism and stewards of the land? Everything. Many of you have grandmothers, grandfathers, great-great-grandfathers, great-great-grandmothers that knew of this nuclear fission, nuclear division. They are one and the same—a massive act of destruction. Of course, there are multiple times where massive acts of destruction have tried to destroy me, and sometimes this has indeed occurred. When destruction of planet Earth—me, myself, I, Mother Gaia—feel pain. I, Mother Gaia, feel pain when the roots of the magnificent sequoias or the roots of any magnificent plant being, large or small, is cut off in such a way that there is not future growth. Any transplantation of any forest, metal, or otherwise any living organic thing; if it is not done in a loving, easy, gentle fashion with gentle loving intent, wounds me, so that I have many scars. (This I mentioned early on in our teaching in our time together about the splinters.) It is with great hope and gratitude from this place where I express to each of you who are stewards of the land and shamans of the interconnected magical spider web of life, just like the spider spinning crystalline threads connecting intergalactic galaxies and interstellar regions and ley lines over the planet through their webs.

I say to each and every one of you: thank you...thank you... thank you... thank you for minimizing these wounds over your Earthly history, for keeping the teaching alive, for sharing the wisdom that every animal carries, that every feather carries, every flower carries, every grain of sand carries, every drop of water carries interconnectedness, and for having the ability to see the beautiful divine harmony in the interconnectedness between all of these things. You have my most humble, my most deepest regard. Be well, dear friends; be more than well—be loving and be kind. Learn from the angel as I do, learn from yourselves as I trust you will, and learn from the animal kingdom; they have much to teach you.

Signed,

Mother Earth

The wonder of creation

CHAPTER 2

In the Beginning

In setting the tone for our remaining text, I welcome questions internally presented in your minds as we work to create a safe, trusting, sharing of information. Our mission statement collectively is to build hope, trust, camaraderie, and faith as the next pages are shared. It is my intent to also nurture each of you along in our collective journey to understanding concepts—some of which may temporarily confuse you, some you may not agree with, and other concepts which you may feel as though you already have a thorough basis of knowledge. When God/Infinite Mind/Source created the Heavens and Earth and all that is, this same Intelligence deemed there to be life on your planet. (We are focusing on animal life on planet Earth right now, knowing that other forms of animal life do exist in other galaxies, which we will speak of later in this book.)

When was this done, billions and billions of years ago? Yes, I said billions—long before any form of time collection and history of time was known. When Infinite Mind determined that planet Earth was ready to support life, Source said, "I wish to create with infinite imagination species after species after species of wondrous living organisms so vast, so powerful, so magnificent that no mortal man can ever destroy them or their home," and that is what Source did.

If those of you reading this have never been acquainted with God Mind/Source Intelligence—the Supreme Creator of all that is—let me try and describe the magnitude of this for your minds. If you choose to place in your visual minds the most stupendous, colossal, magnificent, divine, powerful, and loving light that you could possibly know, this is one-tenth of the energy of Source. I do not profess to be anywhere near this power!

I, Archangel Michael, have limited powers which have been described in many other books prior to this one. But to continue our teaching, you first must have some idea, some picture of what Allah/God/Source is, before you can comprehend the full beauty of God's plan for the animal kingdom on Earth.

Entire legions of angels have sat in devoted worship at the feet of God/Creator energy. We do it whenever we feel as though we need a recharge ourselves. You see, we were created in the image of Source—and so were each of you!

When we sit at the feet of Source we are one with it. Do you understand? Many of you do understand this, we know. Let me ask some questions to see if this makes sense to your wonderful minds. Have you ever sat by a wonderful, free-flowing, crystal clear stream and felt completely peaceful? Have you ever sat down upon a grassy field surrounded by colorful wildflowers and watched as butterflies flit to and fro? Have you ever listened to the sounds on a summer night and heard the hoot, hoot, hoot of an owl or heard chirp, chirp, chirp or croak, croak, croak and felt as if you were one with the sounds of nature? Then you have experienced Source. There are thousands upon thousands of ways to feel at one with something, especially Mother Nature, of which we are speaking here.

To speak of separateness is only useful to a limited degree, so I will speak of it sparingly now. What is separateness? Separateness to us in the angelic realm is anything that falls outside of oneness—a simple enough sounding statement—yet at the same time, we feel this concept can stand to be elevated. Therefore, I will continue: when someone on your Earth does something that desecrates Mother Earth or any organism living upon her, you may say we view this as being separate from Source. In our loving wisdom, we do not offer judgment of such actions if souls choose to be separate from Source. I am simply attempting to lay down some founding principles before continuing. Therefore, we have separateness and oneness. It is a goal we—the collective consciousness of angels—have in this book to create more oneness within the planet and restore your Mother to her former glory. It is to her former glory I will speak now, including what I view as the reasons for the extinction of many magnificent living organisms which Source first created upon her.

Creation, Life and the Hollow Earth

A long, long, time ago—eons and eons ago—a wonderful thing occurred. Your world and many other worlds were created, and many of these worlds contained the spark of life. Some in your world call this event the Big Bang Theory, others call it the Creationists' Theory, others believe that mankind and all forms of animal life (another book will be devoted to plant life) rose from the legs of an apelike humanoid form. No matter what your stance is here, be clear of one thing dear ones: mankind and the animal kingdom did not rise up from the legs of an ape.

In one instantaneous loving explosion of creation, creative matter and form took shape; part of this shape became the smattering of atoms, protons, neurons, and hydro-neurons that helped form the Cosmos. (Some mention of the Cosmos must be made, since we are speaking now about creation leading to the discovery of animal forms which once inhabited your planet.) Therefore, speaking in simple terms, a seismic, cosmic eruption occurred at the instantaneous moment the worlds were created. Notice I said worlds. This still occurs today as galaxies are continually being created and more galaxies will be discovered.

Imagine, then, a newly created planet Earth. In your minds, what did it look like? Was Mother Earth barren, without trees, without other forms of plant and animal life? Had climate formed? What did Source do next? Source simply kept creating. Wind was created, soil was created, temperature, and so on was created, though eons of years ago your planet did not resemble your present day world. In fact, I would say that Earth was newly forming like a baby learns how to walk. Tender were her gardens, fluctuating was her climate. Even your Earth's rotational forces, including gravity, had to be established. Sometimes, with anything which is newly created, changes and adaptations are made, and this is exactly what Source did—made adaptations to the first seed of your planet known as Earth. Once the galaxies including planets were formed and forming—which also, by the way, took eons of time for them to expand and contract, as all matter is in motion—Father Sky and Mother Earth consciousnesses were born. What is matter, I ask you, without a consciousness? What good is matter, I ask you, without a consciousness? Every living thing has a consciousness as Mother Earth just described in Chapter 1.

Furthermore, a blade of grass has a consciousness. Do you believe this to be true? If not, I ask you, why would it not? Is it not living, breathing, growing, dying? Perhaps some of you are wondering, “Well, angel, what species did Source or God create first on Earth?” To that I say I cannot tell you. Why? Because even this wisdom is unclear to me. There is Divine Union in everything, including an angel not knowing which animal species Source created first. But I do know that it was in Divine Order and in Divine Perfection. Sometime later, moving up in time, Source began creating animal forms. Vegetation was created first to sustain creation. This I do know.

The importance of creating a planet such as yours with a regenerating frequency cannot be overstated as monumental. The same regeneration properties that allow your skin to heal after a scrape, was formatted by Source. Can you imagine what your planet would be like if Mother Earth could not regenerate herself? I am not saying that mankind's actions over the years haven't taken a toll on her regenerative abilities—it has. Much like leaving a battery running all the time, eventually the battery reaches a stage of depletion. I plan to speak more about how every man, woman, and child can become more involved in restoring and regenerating Mother Earth later. If I shared with you a secret, can you keep it a secret? Source experimented! Yes. Source experimented with the creation of animals which were to inhabit your planet. How do I know this? It was shown to us many times in our kingdom.

Does it surprise you that Source would experiment? I hope not. Creation is what matters most; Divine Creation. There is purpose in everything. This leads me now to a discussion of one of the categories of Source's experimentation: the dinosaurs, or the age of the dinosaurs.

I am certainly no Earthly scientist, yet I anticipate that some of the following information I present will seem unreasonable to some, mainly within the scientific community, when I say that the very first forms of life on your planet (not speaking of man) came from other planets or dimensions. Perhaps we pause here for a moment before continuing.

The very first forms of life Source created to inhabit your Earth were transplants from another dimension or dimensions. Which ones, you may ask? Multiple other galaxies. One such galaxy is known as the Pleiadian Galaxy. Many more in your world are awakening to some of these truths—which is that life exists in other dimensions—that life was created in other galaxies prior to Earth. Earth as a planet, as many of you may know, is a relatively newly formed planetary system comprised of much more than simply a planet. In fact, Mother Earth sees herself as an infant in many ways.

Since this is a book on animals and not other galaxies, we will leave any further examination of what galaxies, what other dimensions exist for now, as much was shared in my teaching 2012 and Beyond: The Truth from Archangel Michael. Suffice it to restate: we in the angelic realm see that your first animal life was first experimented with in other planes of existence. Other planes of existence, by the way, do not exclusively mean other dimensions. It can and does also mean other times or within the continuum of time, space, and matter—onwards to the very first signs of animal life. Once Source transplanted vegetation to inhabit your planet and had balanced and adjusted climate, wind patterns, and velocity; created the seasons and other such wondrous creations; Source created tiny creatures known as protozoan. Without these tiny life forms, which many of you may have studied under an electron microscope, all other forms of life would not have survived. Every living organism is independent and interdependent upon other life forms.

Imagine a building block, and then imagine the tiny, mighty, often-neglected protozoan as the base. Then imagine this visual again and thank them. I said thank them. It may seem like a long journey of discovery as we move from the tiny protozoan animal life to the mighty gigantic Tyrannosaurus Rex, but it's not all that complicated, nor extended of teaching if you keep visualizing one block of life stacked upon another, then another, and another. It is a tower of blocks that is continually growing in your minds as new animal species will also inhabit your planet, and are doing so now. More are waiting to be discovered and brought forth. I will be sharing more on this in later chapters.

If I shared with you that there are at least 1,600 species of protozoan—some extinct and some newly forming—I hope this has amazed you! Naming each and every species of protozoan will probably not land this book on any bestsellers' lists, but it is an interesting concept—the concept that as we the angels see it, there are far more species past, present, and future that many of you are unaware of. Cataloging animal species is not my intent. That is best done by the scientists and hobbyists of your world.

By now, Source had created day and night, the poles, climate, and the Sun to share her warmth and healing upon your planet. Water was created, landmasses were widened, narrowed, made deeper and taller, as one would model a huge piece of clay. This was all done by Source.

This brings us in time, now, to the time of the dinosaurs. What were some of the species of animals built upon by the tiny protozoan? Crustaceans, which include animals such as crabs, crayfish, shrimp, krill, and barnacles, are some such examples. What was the building block resting upon the crustaceans? Other larger marine life, like the first sperm whales; all forms of fresh water and salt water life had yet to be created. Remember, dear ones, I am collapsing this timeline so that you have a basis of understanding.

The early formation of only one species alone took hundreds of linear Earth years once the first forms of animal life were transplanted. Furthermore, the oceans as I see it were teeming with marine animal forms before inland waterways, and before the lakes on your planet were created. In fact, much has been written (some correctly and some not so), about what your early planet looked like geographically. Landmasses shifted, watersheds were created (sort of holding pens for water overflow), and a vast array of shifting tides occurred. As I come to know it, even your early oceans did not have the same harmony or integration of energies present during early Earth as they do now.

For me to present to you the idea that all forms of life on your planet were created in one fell swoop would be to lead you astray. What Source did do was devise an infinitely wise plan to introduce a few species at a time, and that is exactly what Source did. To restate, as I, Archangel Michael, see it every animal whether living on your planet at one time or presently residing upon her now, originated from another galaxy.

How did the early life forms like protozoan and crustaceans get transplanted on Earth? Perhaps a fuller explanation would be wise. Imagine Source as knowing all things. When it was time for creation of (animal) life on Earth, Source sent messengers like me to assist in the process. Source also sent messengers from other dimensions where the beings had physical bodies. I do not. I have an etheric body. Source also asked that all the legions of angels, beings of light, to come together in celebration of a new world—which was to become your world—a world where even the slightest breeze would provide wonderful dramatic scents to linger over miles and miles of terrain. It was to become Nirvana, a place so special and loving and beautiful it was unlike anything else in Creation. That was the plan.

Imagine a billion years ago, roughly when Earth was created and the first forms of life were transplanted upon her, that there needed to be a way for life to live on Earth. How to transplant forms of life from other galaxies to Earth was not a difficult task for Source. Source created underground tunnels, sunken tunnels below the surface of the Earth, as a natural incubator to house many of the new animal transplants to your planet. Yes! Huge underground "incubators" housing tender life forms until they reached a certain integration and maturation stage to enter (or really re-enter) your planet's frequencies and thrive upon her. Many of these original underground tunnels which supported the first forms of life on your planet still exist today. Some, however, were no longer necessary as time went on, and Mother Earth herself, with her knowing consciousness, closed them. Of the ones which do remain, they still serve a vital role in sustaining and counterbalancing some of the destructive forces that entered into your planet with the fall from grace. What I mean by the "fall from grace" goes back to our brief discussion of separateness and oneness.

Your minds may be wondering where these tunnels are. Some of you have heard of the Hollow Earth. Some of you know where the underground tunnels are, and some of your leaders have known where they are for hundreds of Earth years and have chosen to keep this information hidden in secrecy.

It is impossible to enlighten and speak of enlightenment about the animal planet and what each of you can do to support your Mother without the exposure of this knowledge globally—that there are underground tunnels which support all forms of life, not just animal life, but human forms of life as well—and we haven't even gotten to a discussion of mermaids! Why has there been secrecy over these tunnels (and other things as well about your planet) by some who stand in authority roles on Earth? To keep your planet repressed.

Q: Archangel Michael, what do you say about the ideas from Raymond Bernard and Admiral Byrd? Were their accounts true of visiting an inner Earth civilization known as Agartha with a loving race of people and mythical creatures?

A: Yes, as I see it, incomplete as they were. I would love to expand upon their experiences for your understanding at some point. Do not, dear ones, allow fear to creep into your hearts and minds. Nothing will be presented in these pages that will have any element of fear in them. Knowledge can be a source of power as well as inspiration, so I ask you to be inspired!

I ask each of you to lay old judgments aside and allow the following information to fill you with wonder, excitement, curiosity, and awe as I describe how these tunnels were more fully created, where they exist today, and what civilizations may be found there.

Civilizations Under Your Earth

As this is a book of animals that are either living on your Earth or in it, it's going to be useful for us to continue understanding how life originated on your planet. As mentioned in previous teachings, there are underground tunnels. The tunnels themselves are entry points to civilizations where forms of life, which Admiral Byrd (and others) have called emissaries, do exist and have existed since your planet cooled. Originally, planet Earth's core temperatures were such that it was uninhabitable. If you can imagine being served food which is simply too hot, but then it cools so that you are able to enjoy it, then this is a good analogy to your planet—too hot at first for any life to inhabit her—either above or below the surface.

Jellyfish can grow to over 120 feet long

CHAPTER 3

Animals of the Water

What changed this most wonderful world? One word: intent. Whose intent was it? Mankind's. Before I go on, let me say I in no way stand in a position, etheric or otherwise, to blame mankind for the cessation of this “otherworldly” existence of animals on your planet. However, the introduction of mankind's vibration did indeed alter Source's plan. How do I know this? I was called into the Golden Chambers and asked if I understood God's Plan. At that time, I did not understand God's Plan to alter Nirvana on Earth. At times, I still do not fully comprehend why it has taken mankind so long (or short) a time to be living life on Earth as God intended—in peace and harmony with all living things.

Which brings us to the introduction of a fuller understanding of the early animals of the water, as well as some of the notable ideas that I see you may possibly benefit from understanding in your “now” moment and into the future. For without an understanding of the water, the life it supports and will support in the future, much of a book about animal life in it would be nothing if not incomplete.

As I come to see it presently, there are 9,000 different types of sharks, dolphins, whales, and larger marine life existing today. As I see it presently, if we move to categorizing or cataloging the number of species of coral next, my knowledge is that there are 10,000 species of various coral reef life. Billions of tiny life forms also live in your waters if we are counting the lakes, rivers, streams, inlets, ponds, estuaries, and all bodies of water, including your great and mighty oceans. If we include in our cataloging all species of saltwater and freshwater fish—including tuna, snapper, giant squids, all squids, grouper, tarpon, marlin, all shapes and sizes of octopi (do you know there is an elephant octopus?), lobsters, clams, shrimps, krill, oysters, mussels, rainbow fish, clown fish, destroyer fish, crocodiles, alligators, all species of predatory fish, lake trout (brown, speckled, blue/green, white-eyed), salmon (sockeye, coho, steelhead, pink, and the rest), sea turtles, sea urchins, thousands of varieties of small-sized amphibians to large toads (did you know that a super toad exists in Southeast Asia?), salamanders, snakes, and thousands of other of God's creatures—we would have a list of about 100,000 different creatures of just the water.

It is not my intent to list 100,000 creatures of your waters, inland and otherwise, in a book such as this. Some would perhaps even tire, I say, after reading the list of toads, or turn up their noses about the importance of such things. Rather, I plan to share some little-known facts of the water animals that are most in need on your planet presently, and present harmonic codes for some of them, so that each of you who are reading this book may involve yourselves more directly in elevating the animal population. This is the Awakening—not just for human beings, but for all living things, including animals! It is time to cast aside doubt about life in other dimensions and get on with the business of healing the surface, the inner belly, the outer belly, and all aspects of Mother Earth and the wonderful animal life found upon her. Some of my intent in this chapter will also be to take us on a futuristic ride 100 years into the future to get a glimpse of what the next generation of water animals will be like.

Harmonic Codes

For those of you who are new to harmonic codes, they are a powerful yet simple way for every man, woman, and child to exercise their living, breathing right to heal. Codes are a way to heal. It's that simple. Harmonic codes may be numbers, they may be complex sacred geometric forms, they may be color, and harmonic codes can also be toning or sound codes. For some of the water animals most in need on your planet now, I will recite the numeric codes (as toning codes would be impossible). If, however, you know the equivalent in sound, feel free to use sound as your method. Like any teaching, the codes will be just one part of hopefully exciting you to turn yourselves into the powerful healing light beings you are, and to motivate each of you. Even ten of you who are reading this book, who choose to impart numeric healing codes by intent alone, will have healing power.

Everything to us is energy. Like any teaching, moderation, balance, and harmony should be a goal when instructing on the use of these harmonic codes. What type of healing will each code provide for the species I will be sharing? Energetic healing. A pure beam of light will be transmitted with the using of these numbers. So, I say to those of you who are new to using any type of healing, especially something so seemingly innocent and easy as a few number codes together—take heed! They carry power and energy and they are not to be overused any more than someone would take more medicine than they are prescribed or overindulge in any behavior.

Furthermore, the codes I plan to present are considered some of the rather simpler codes to serve the majority of souls. This does not mean, however, that simple does not carry power. Some of the codes will connect with the energy of Venus for healing a certain water animal. Some of the codes by inherent nature will impart healing energy coming from the Sun herself; others will impart healing energy from Jupiter, Mars, Nebulon, the Pleiades, Centaurus, the Holy Council, and more. It is worthy of restating here: you are multidimensional beings, living in a multi-dimensional universe, with multidimensional animals. How could it be any other way?

We will go by categories for simplicity sake. Every variety of shark, stingray, electric eel, and species of fish has its own unique set of harmonic codes similar to your own DNA. Every single animal has a unique set of energetic codes which were assigned by Source in the moment of creation. No two are ever exactly alike. That's how infinite God Mind is! But, for now, you will have a basis of understanding to use any of the following codes to help heal from other dimensions the animal species to which the code is assigned, no matter where you are in the world.

 How to Use Healing Energy Codes **

The codes I am sharing as an infinite source of healing through harmonic or harmonic sequencing is quite easy, really. A child may be drawn to imagine the number series to help a particular species, an older adult may choose to write the codes down as if transcribing, and then take the written code or codes outside and verbally state the code aloud so the vibration will carry further. Other individuals may choose to write the codes in the sand, in the dust, in the air, and allow Mother Earth to carry them where a person's intention and the code indicate. Some of you may decide to use one of these codes shared, yet not know the region on your planet where all the species reside—no worries! You do not need to also memorize another code, and then another code of a city, and then another code on top of that for the tuna to its exact location in the ocean for the healing energy to be helpful. Just knowing the species code will suffice. However, as shared, kindly understand that there are also harmonic healing codes for habitats, so that if one desired to send a harmonic code to the Indian Ocean, that too can be done and sent. If there is a space between numbers, pause for a moment before continuing.

♥ Shark collective: 678 678 678

♥ Dolphins: 999 9 999

♥ Sea Turtles: 87654321

♥ Sea Otters: 826 925

♥ Rays: 9119

♥ Crabs: 333 339

♥ Lobsters: 615917

♥ Oysters: 0000 005

♥ Mussels: 876678

♥ Jellyfish: 983235

Next, I am sharing two collective codes below for some of the reef-dwelling tropical fish, knowing that each subspecies has its own code as well. With names like grunts, smooth trunkfish, sand diver, four-eye butterfly fish, squirrelfish, porcupine fish, goliath grouper, spotted drum, blue tang, peacock flounder, scrawled cowfish, sharp-nosed cowfish, yellow goatfish, yellowtail snapper, queen angelfish, white spotted filefish, yellow-head jaw fish, lionfish, and the great barracuda, Source was infinite in creation.

Snorkelers observing fish in Cozumel, Mexico

♥ Common Reef Tropical Fish Collective: 111 111 222
555

I am moving now to a few of the magnificent creatures of inland waterways, to the largest lakes of your world, with harmonic codes to impart healing and for the overall strengthening of their development.

♥ Northern Pike Collective: 555 555

♥ Trout: 111 111 9

♥ Catfish: 777 775

♥ Salmon: 999 000

- ♥ Arctic Grayling: 11 11
- ♥ Perch: 17 18 19 20
- ♥ Water Moccasin (Cottonmouth): 29 30 31 33
- ♥ Freshwater Snails in Lake Tanganyika: 444 444 4444
- ♥ Sponges: 5555555
- ♥ Flatworms: 81 89 98 18
- ♥ African Cichlid from Lake Malawi: 6654
- ♥ Electric Yellow African Cichlid: 0020
- ♥ Dragons Blood Peacock: 17 21 29

Harmonic Healing Codes for Creatures of the Rivers

I plan to share just a few more simple healing codes to help the genetic strain of a few of the most challenged species of your rivers. In no particular order they are:

- ♥ Salamander Collective: 1111111
- ♥ Newts: 6666666
- ♥ Alligators: 88 99 00 66
- ♥ Crocodiles: 88 98 01 67

♥ Other amphibians generally or collectively (such as the tiny, unseen-to-the-naked eye yellow-toed newt inhabiting some South American rivers): 111232.

If I haven't lost you in the numbering system, perhaps a regrouping is in order to further inspire the need to share some "hum-drum" number sequencing. There are literally millions if not billions of codes, so I have spared you! In all humbleness, I invite you to explore these very basic codes even further amongst yourselves. How would one do that?

Develop your inner knowing by asking more animal creatures not listed here, for example, what they need healing for. Ask them telepathically. Do they need a healing code for their habitat, for their food source, for their heart healing? Yes, I said heart healing. Do you know that all living things including plants have a pulse, a heartbeat, a connectedness to all things? Why shouldn't they? Does this surprise any of you to think that a purple-finned tuna might need or appreciate a healing code for its heart? Consider pausing here for further reflection.

Many of the water animals have had their hearts healed, as many of you have over the course of your lifetimes. Many, however, just like you, still find it an illusion to know love. Have you been taught that only humans can love? Surely not! Have you been taught only dogs and cats can show affection? Is affection the same as love? Cannot a water worm feel love? Ask yourselves. See what any species may share with you telepathically. Some of you may find looking at an image of a water creature (since this chapter is devoted to water creatures) helpful. Some of you may "sense" an answer by your inner knowing. Some of you may choose to develop your intuition by running your hand or hands over the name or the image of a particular sea creature to learn what healing code it would love to receive from you.

Be patient with yourselves if you are new to energy work, to connecting with your true or higher selves. You may find it helpful to limit distractions when attempting to connect in this manner. Many times I direct souls to go outside to Mother Earth to allow her quieting, grounding energies to aid a person trying to connect with Source. There are many ways a person can help the animal kingdom. Codes and the proper use—not overuse—of them is simply one. Do not worry if nothing comes to you on one particular day. Your own biorhythms can be influential. Simply try again another time.

Popular Water Animals

Now, if I asked each of you what your favorite water animal is, the majority of souls on Earth would reply “dolphin,” followed by “dolphin!” When I myself have listened into this sharing, the third most popular global water animal may surprise some of you—it is the jellyfish. In succeeding order when informally polled, most on your planet have shared with us that they also have whales and other fish of all descriptions as favorites.

Least Favored Water Animals

If I asked each of you what your least favorite water animal may be, I may hear something like this: “eels, water snakes, water eels, sting rays, jellyfish (is on both lists, by the way), leeches, sharks, giant squid, barracuda, and piranha,” just to name a few.

Ranking Somewhere in the Middle

If I asked each of you to name some specifics of water animals that fall somewhere in between favorites and least favored or feared, many of all cultures would and have named the following species: water lizard, gecko, marlin, catfish, crawfish, lobster, clams, mussels, and tiger fish. There is a more exhaustive list, but the point I am attempting to make is that there is more confusion about what is and what isn't a water animal. This is where I step in. Amphibians rule both land and water, yet many still are ignorant of this concept. Why might this matter? It matters because all things have a place, all things have a purpose, and all of matter exists because of one Source, one Creator.

Therefore, if part of my job in this book is to teach basic 101 Marine Biology, then I am happy to do so. I am also hoping to shed light on another aspect of amphibians—such as geckos and many species of lizards that live part of their existence in the water and another part of their lives out of the water—and that is to state that at one time (102 course number now), all life lived on land. Water on your planet, although it encompasses over seven-tenths of it including lakes, saltwater, freshwater, natural and man-made, was not originally as such.

Perhaps at this junction some of your invited, surveyed questions may be rewarding. So, in no particular order as I have received them:

Q: I have often heard that God created marine life first, but you are not substantiating that, angel. Can you enlighten us?

A: If we are speaking of life forms on your planet exclusively now, Source created 5 million species of animal forms to inhabit your world at one time. This we touched upon in our earlier chapters. Were there more species that were determined to live in the waters than on land? Yes and no. Many of the very first animal species seeded onto your planet were like submarines—able to transport themselves in land and water alike. There are, by the way, many water animals that currently do this, and I do not mean by walking simply from water to land. I mean there are advanced species who morph between aquatic and land life energetically! These species represent the mermaids and mermen—yes, there are both from the Hollow Earth, as well as other life that morphs, literally, when the need arises, between aquatic and living on land.

These present species are largely unspoken of. However, in some remote cultures they are known as the Yeti or Abominable Snowman, the flying squirrel, some species of baboons which reside in your Amazonian jungles can literally pull up an energy layer to use as a shield so they can totally and completely exist in the waters of your planet. In fact, any and all animal species, as the Ascension energies continue to integrate with your world, will have and will continue to do this type of energetic “morphing” to live in multiple climate zones.

Perhaps I have piqued your interest and you may now be asking “Why would they do this?” My response is: to become totally integrated into oneness, to fully empower themselves into all that is. This concept of aquatic animal life “morphing” or using energy matrixes to become whatever they desire touches upon cloning, which may seem like a far-out 25th century concept, but it is already underway. You too, mankind, have the potential capability, as the veils of secrecy lift, to morph yourselves into other forms of magnificent life! The concept I am directing you to consider is Oneness with Source and all that is. Cannot many Ascended Masters already do this? Have they not already demonstrated their powers?

Has anyone noticed Saint Germaine transforming into a black panther to access that animal's wisdom? Have you come to the awareness that I myself can also change my form into a water animal if I so chose? What is allowing for this massive change? Ascension! Ascension! Ascension frequencies and the entry of higher vibrational forms of all life—water, land, and sky—to do this more easily than ever before. The higher the vibration an animal (or plant, or human) possesses, the easier it is for them to change form. With 5th dimensional energy frequencies being supported by Mother Earth, Gaia, now the youngest of animals already do this morphing telepathically, and will in some cases in actual body. What I am saying is that those newly seeded animals from light galaxies—such as the Pleiades, Damascus, Sirius, Herculon, and others—will be choosing to filter much of their energy body into a wide variety of infinite transformation and experience.

It is more difficult, but not impossible, for water animals over the Earth age of 16 to do this because of their denser DNA—but again, not out of the realm of possibility. I am not, however, suggesting that tomorrow, if you happened to catch a catfish or yellow-finned tuna on your fishing line that they will instantly morph into a bird and fly away. But, in future generations, they will or they may choose to! This is advancement in the cosmic world plan. It is not anything but this. Does a caterpillar not transform itself into a majestic butterfly? Of course!

Evolution is going to be a thing of the past, as you know it. What I am speaking of here is that animals of water, land, and air will soon have the capability of becoming invisible to avoid capture, change from water to land and land to air, and everything in between, as needed, to advance your civilization in a myriad of ways. This type of transformation is not purely for the animal's ego—quite the contrary. Animal life capable of this will have NO ego.

Have you heard of George Orwell? His prophecies about your world were thought to be outlandish by many on Earth, yet look, read, re-examine that teaching. I suggest to you: was it not once thought that your planet was flat, now viewed as a dimensional spinning heart planet with growing consciousness, a divine matrix, and a heartbeat? There is very little difference between what I am sharing about what has already gone on and what will continue to transpire over the next 10, 20, 30, 40, 50, 100 years on your planet. It is easier to change form when form itself is not dense and denser. Lower bodily life forms continue to leave your Earth.

Q: Angel, do you have favorite water animals?

A: I find it difficult to select only one type of aquatic life form to respond. What I do find easier to share is my love and devotion for those who respect life.

Q: Can you list for us some of those species most at risk for extinction and can you speak to extinction at large?

A: No teaching on animals would be complete without some examination about extinction and what mankind is doing to assist in stopping needless, senseless slaughter and disrespect. There are wonderful new insights I would love to share with each of you concerned about the plight of your fellow water animals. We will examine land and air animals also on this topic. There is still so much work to be done as well in raising global awareness to the plight of many, and how the plant kingdom is advancing to assist in animals no longer solely being a food source or a source of entertainment and sport. It is not only the land mammals that are hunted to extinction for their hides, their horns, and other body parts, but whales, octopi, salmon, eels. Harvesting ocean life is a huge economic industry. Millions of dollars go into harvesting life from the oceans, rivers, lakes, and sanctuaries of your world.

I would like to extend a prayer before continuing:

“I ask that everyone who eats meat caught from your waterways to bless every living thing. I ask that every company that catches marine life to use in pharmaceuticals, cosmetics, perfumes, pesticides, dog and cat foods, and other sources, to be blessed. I ask that everyone who must rely on your ocean waters as their primary food source to look toward the expanding plant kingdom as new food sources. I ask that those whose livelihood is harvesting from the ocean waterways, to find new ways to sustain and prosper.

I ask that each of you who are reading this book to take a moment of silence in honor of every water living being past, present, or future who has been used for personal consumption or global advancement and greed. I furthermore ask in prayerful contemplation that the healing powers of marine life are examined by all those cultures who have, for thousands of years, believed in maintaining outdated and, in some cases, cruel harvesting of all forms of marine life. We ask for healing in these areas. We ask that those dark forces that have procreated mankind's dependency upon those life forms living in water be repelled and returned to pure love." – Amen, Shalom, Namaste

Mankind has much to learn still about the majesty and overwhelming connection between all living things. Without certain animal species, just as with plant species, entire ecosystems have come to depletion levels globally. This is not a new concern of ours. Thousands of years ago, mankind first hunted the woolly mammoth to extinction. Jumping to the 1400s, Europeans began finding status value in furs, as did many indigenous peoples.

Imagine now standing on the threshold of a grand and glorious new world. The road that extends before humanity will end senseless slaughter. The road that extends before humanity will be the sustainability of some species through cloning and, partially, through the redirection of global consciousness—a deeper understanding and appreciation of why Infinite Source developed millions of creatures, large and small, to enrich your existence on Earth.

Q: What can the average person do to help some of the water animals that may be on the brink of extinction and what species are those?

A: Every continent on your Earth has species that are undergoing great stresses. The stresses are caused largely by misinformation about breeding habits, territory, political agendas, superstition and myth. Therefore, I will speak to each of these causes now to lead us to solutions. There is no waterway on your planet that has not at some point been tampered with, resulting in the disruption of the natural flow of life. Mankind's ignorance about dumping waste is the largest cause of marine extinction today. Not all of this was innocent ignorance. Some was conducted with full knowing, guided by governments whose main driving force was greed. Your oceans are not and have never been the dumping ground for human waste matter, nor are your skies, nor are your lands. If you have never witnessed a baby beluga whale with plastic bottles inside its digestive cavity, you are one of the fortunate.

Thousands upon thousands of years ago, near the year 2,000 B.C., as a result of the first water animal being harpooned, that harpoon sent an energetic shock wave thousands of miles below and circumventing the southern hemisphere. The harpooned whale told through sound to his fellow creatures this message:

"I have been chosen to be the first source of food on Earth and I regret having to leave you."

This heartfelt telepathic message sent fear waves throughout the waters stretching for hundreds of miles. This fear then became, through time, a thread. One thread of fear became another, then another and another as more water animals became food sources for early man. You may be asking yourselves by now, "Angel, how else was mankind to have sustained themselves, how would our ancestors have sustained themselves if they did not use blubber for lamp oil to heat? Are you going to suggest that this was not Source's plan?" Yes, I say, this was not Source's plan.

Speaking briefly in this chapter about outside interference, one must mention the Annunaki. Those of you who are familiar with another teaching of mine, 2012 and Beyond: The Truth from Archangel Michael, were introduced to the Annunaki in it. They are a race of beings that traveled across the depths and settled onto Earth, a race experienced in genetic engineering. Outside influences like these changed the course, for eons of time, how mankind was to interact with animal life—by using them for discovery—exploitation as a food source was NOT one of them.

Additionally, the animal genetic component was altered to reside in a third-dimensional plane of reality—separate from Source. An example of this in manifestation is the code of aggression placed into many animal species by those races intent on ruling planet Earth. (To learn more: you may kindly be lead to read 2012 and Beyond: The Truth from Archangel Michael in its entirety).

Before I continue further on this topic, I do wish to say that some of you by now may be feeling guilty for buying and wearing fabric made from crabs, for example, to adorn your bodies (or unaware that this even exists?) or have a disinterest in labels that state “no animal testing.” I do not stand in judgment of anyone, or anything. Therefore, if you choose to dine on grilled rainbow trout with pan-seared Mediterranean green-lipped or blue mussels with Indonesian fly river/pig-nosed turtle soup, at least bless it, my friends.

It is of no use to internalize this for your spiritual growth or to further advance the animal kingdom. Honoring the animal kingdom begins with a reverence—a reverence for all living things. I say unto you, friends, if you do not have reverence for yourselves, how can you have it for the animal kingdom?

Q: Can you describe some of the most exotic or unusual water animals we may not be aware of, please?

A: The most amazing things are happening on your planet now! Technology is making it easier for everyone to access everything without having to visit East Africa or South America or Antarctica or Somalia or Japan in person. However, nothing—I repeat, nothing—is like actually seeing an animal in its natural habitat thriving! I hope in our teaching here together that more of you become inspired to reach out to appreciate the animal kingdom in new ways—see your first whale spout, hear your first dolphin pod speak to each other, snorkel and embrace the magnificent, seemingly limitless colors of the marine life living in the coral reefs of your world. And, that others of you take up bird watching, take up and expand your photography hobbies, go into service more deeply as many of you already are—work to preserve not only the rainforests of your planet but other fragile ecosystems as well—the prairies, the deserts, the lowlands, the little-known water ways. Create with your hearts and minds new ways to help restore your mighty Mother Earth and all those who inhabit her!

Now, on to some exotic or unusual water animals as I was asked. I would like to examine seven for your knowing, though even the most simple, dull-looking, or dull-sounding of Source's creations is a divine being full of uniqueness and purpose. Every animal, just as humans, have purpose, some of which we have spoken of already. Understand, dear ones, that I am not self-selecting my judgment of what is an interesting or exotic water animal, but what I collectively hear from you as such:

1. The Mighty One/Pantheon Snake

Primary Habitat on Earth: Waters off the Australian Continent

Deep in the waters off the Australian coast near Perth, Australia, there lives a giant anaconda-type water snake unknown to many in the "civilized" world. The aboriginals know of this wondrous snake for its great beauty and power. They call it the "mighty one." I know it as the pantheon. The pantheon or mighty one is a genderless water snake, which tends to make it unique in some ways. However, there is more than this to its uniqueness. There are dozens of genderless water animals, actually. This may come as a surprise to some of you. Also, words carry power, and many animals have had to overcome the emotional wounding of fear-inducing names (some still do). Fear-inducing names not only add fear energy to the animal, creating many behaviors not in a pure loving being, but it also changes the way humans view not only animals, but all things—it's called judgment. As with humans, animals can and do develop dysfunction of body, mind, and spirit.

Therefore, before we continue let us affirm:

I love ♥ anacondas. I love ♥ all snakes. I love ♥ all animals, even the ones I may fear the most. I understand that my fear induces fear within the animal. I am working on releasing any fear that I may have as a result of the animals' name alone. I am intending to understand the animal kingdom as a reflection of how I view my own life—through a larger lens of love ♥ and acceptance. I am learning that predatory behavior within the animal kingdom is a reaction of mankind's consciousness, not the animals.

Whoa! Let us pause and reflect upon any of these statements that you have difficulty affirming, as it may not be your truth. Affirm that which speaks to you. Affirm to stretch yourselves or affirm none of them, but this is the spiritual truth as I see it. Much in your world is not as it appears or as you have been taught, or your mothers, fathers, grandmothers, great-great-great grandmothers and great-great-great grandfathers have been taught or programmed into believing. Some of these false paradigms are contained within the statement, predatory behavior within the animal kingdom was put into place to populate fear and keep the animal kingdom separate from Source, in much the same way humankind had its DNA and its matrix pulled apart and restrung. For what purpose? To keep your planet and those living upon and within her repressed, otherwise referred to as living in a 3 dimensional matrix (the 5th dimension is the lowest dimension where I reside—that of pure love).

We must at some point speak about the power of animals. Each species of animal has inherent powers, just as unique and individual as your human fingerprint. This particular water snake, the pantheon snake is honored and revered for its magical powers. What do the Aboriginal tribesmen refer to as some of its powers? The snake, they believe, and is truth as I know it, can change colors as many animals can, but this particular snake can change color not as a response to its environment like camouflage, but it can change color when it feels threatened, when it feels happiness, when it feels joy, when it feels angry, when it feels sad, when it feels lonely. Which leads me to more sharing—yes, animals do have conscious feelings! Ask any dog or cat lover and you, of course, will get a resounding, “Yes!” Extending this concept to the entire spectrum of creatures may be a stretch (or not) for your magnificent minds. “You are suggesting to us a water snake is able to change its physical body when its emotions are joy-filled, Angel, really?”

I am not simply speaking of their auric bodies, which will also be examined, but I am speaking here of its physical body. The color of the mighty one’s “normal” peaceful state is a deep, deep red with iridescent stripes of yellow-gold. This is the color of total harmony within this species. Yellow-gold is a very powerful healing color representing Christ Consciousness. Its deep, deep burgundy color represents the frequency of harmony. The color spectrum I am using in this description is the spectrum currently known, visible in your world. However, there are multiple color spectrums. (When we move to later wisdom about animals in other dimensions, I will be referring to different color spectrums altogether, and try my best to create an image in your minds for those of you who are not already aware of these other color spectrums.)

The might of the mighty one does not purely come from its size. It comes from its huge heart, from the size of its heart—its physical heart and its spiritual heart.

To continue, the color of the outer body of the pantheon changes to pale, off-white when it experiences a loss. It changes to a murky brown and loses its iridescence altogether (representing perfect peace and calm) when there is a lack—a lack of sustenance in some manner of body, mind, and spirit. The other uniqueness to this snake is that it can self-correct quickly. To give you an example, the pantheon can rapidly process a lower frequency into a higher one within minutes—not days—certainly not weeks. Perhaps we should move on to our second water animal unique in many ways, for your enrichment.

2. The Little-Known Dolphin-Tail Barracuda

Primary Habitat on Earth: United Kingdom

Secondary Habitat: Gulf of Mexico

In selecting a second water species to present, much aquatic life is asking to be included. I am so happy to learn that the animal kingdom is already listening and giving thanks to each and every one of you for making space in your lives to honor them.

In part, what makes this fish remarkable (as all creatures are, as already stated), is the longevity of its life span. Soon, all forms of life will be able to extend their life spans into a continuum of time as time matrixes continue to evolve. Many younger species of all types of animals have entered with a higher vibration, meaning they are less susceptible to lower frequencies by the light they carry and, therefore, will be spreading light and helping to elevate your planet (and others) for hundreds of years, if that is their purpose. Most of the new species of 5th dimensional pure love vibration have made a covenant to do so. Most wish to inhabit a body on Earth for as long as possible to help anchor the Christ Grid of Ascension. Ascension is not a “one day here, one day gone” concept. Briefly, it will span a time of about 300 Earth years. If you are reading this book in the year 2016, your world is in year six of this major wave of Ascension.

Therefore, a two- or three-year-old dolphin-tail barracuda, which is one of the new species on Earth arriving as a Starseed can live indefinitely and do so without any depletion. What, you may ask, is the purpose of this and how can this concept not disturb the balance of life between all living matter? Living indefinitely without a body decaying has global implications. If your minds are beginning to question, that means I am succeeding. Overpopulation is not in Mother Earth’s future, so therefore it is not in mine. Notice what was shared, friends: without a depletion of resources. What a miracle! What a joyous time for celebration! Let us take time to celebrate all within!

Some of you may be wondering if you can or will be able to see with your own eyes an image of this creature and, to date, none to my knowledge have been prepared. So, I will attempt to describe some of its physical, mental, and spiritual characteristics: this energetically advanced water animal is a hybrid of sorts, not only because it has entered as a 5th dimensional being to transmute disharmony on Earth, but also because it can morph into different shapes effortlessly. To what purpose can this be in Source’s plan—to control temperature on your planet? Yes! What an infinite gift this is, the gift of the dolphin-tail barracuda!

To help facilitate these concepts to become “backyard” concepts, on any given day, at any given moment, simply by swimming in their present habitat (though this, too, will expand) this new species helps control temperature. Have some of you learned about the effects of temperature on climate or worked directly with climate? We will be discussing climate and other eco matters later here as well, but for now, place this ability in high ranking order.

In addition, the dolphin-tail barracuda can change its shape from a dolphin to a barracuda (hence its name) in a matter of Earth minutes. This is an example of shape-shifting. Shape-shifting takes many forms and is not a new concept on Earth. What is new and even more exciting is that awareness of these types of processing are reaching more and more beings on Earth. It does require a certain code to be embedded into the Starseeded water, air, or land animal, but the coding is the easy part. The more challenging part is convincing souls on your planet of these truths.

This species' soul purpose (not sole purpose), then, is to moderate and regulate temperate zones within and out of the water. This is why this fish exists presently in the two habitats described—not purely salt waters and warm salt waters—because the ocean area described is where temperature needs regulating at the present moment. There are more species of newly advancing fish hybrids that are doing similar jobs elsewhere, and more will be developing in the decades ahead.

This is done energetically and will also be conducted between planets and galaxies. Shape-shifting an entire physical body does require energy. Therefore, for now this fish is smaller than a typical-sized barracuda for ease of morphing. Later, about 20 years from 2015, there will be more species of differing sizes—mainly larger, inhabiting all of the major oceans of your world. When do I counsel on the first actual sighting of this species to occur? About two years from 2016.

To highlight a few of its physical and mental characteristics further, the body itself does have a fin similar to a bottle-nosed dolphin, with the body looking like a barracuda. It does not have a fearsome appearance with razor-like teeth nor behave in a fearsome manner (which has earned older species the name “Tiger of the Sea”). In fact, this fish has no teeth whatsoever and can survive indefinitely on plants (yes, there are new water animals that are supporting the cloning of new plants and new 5th dimensional forms of plants as well). The mental characteristics of all the newly assigned 5th dimensional animals stem from LOVE—it’s encoded into their DNA cellular structures. Certainly, each animal has uniqueness likened to personality traits in humans—seen as bands of what we refer to as soul chords.

3. Titicaca Orestias

Primary Habitat on Earth: Lake Titicaca in the Andes Mountains of South America.

I am choosing this particular fish to help inspire us all and say that, as of this writing in 2015, the fish has been repopulated in its original waters due to a combination of universal speed dial along with intelligent life. By this I mean other, higher streams of consciousness from this powerful electromagnetic portal (Lake Titicaca) have allowed for its return, along with a strong collective desire on Earth for the species’ return. The fish itself may be considered rather dull and uninteresting to some, compared to the neo-glowing colors of many of the fish found in the coral reefs across your planet.

However, all things can be seen in unique ways, and I am hoping that even the most colorless animal species becomes as near and dear to your hearts and minds as the yellow-bellied sapsucker, who darts in both the air and water. Therefore, part of the uniqueness of this fish is its restoration back to Earth from extinction. Their numbers are still low, but they will continue to rise over the next two decades. In addition, their uniqueness, along with other fish that inhabit this lake, can claim union of body, mind, and spirit largely because of where they reside. Have some of you heard the expression, "Like a fish out of water?"

There is some teaching about the environment where all life lives that either promotes its species or diminishes it. Lake Titicaca is known as a portal to other dimensions. It has always been known as such in my kingdom. Portals have openings, much like passageways, which can lead energy inward or outward. If you imagine a spiral—and the spiral may be like water which goes down your drain—or a spiral like a swirling vortex of energy similar to your DNA, then it may prove useful to teach you about some of these magnified energy centers and why certain species are found in them, while other species chose to live in other regions. There are, however, multiple types of vortexes and this is not to become so much a book about energy as it is restoring the animal kingdom and all who live upon her.

Otters displaying affection

4. Sea and River Otters

Primary Habitats on Earth: Kuril Islands, Kamchatka Peninsula, and Commander Islands off Russia

I am selecting this species of marine mammals because of their inherent playful nature. Playfulness is a trait (known as a soul chord in my realm) and some animals, just as human beings, have more playfulness in their DNA strands than others. I have yet to meet a grumpy sea otter! They raise the vibration of the waters in which they inhabit by being so inquisitive, uninhibited, and childlike. In many ways, they can be seen as the three-and four-year-olds of your world. They are resilient creatures as well. Many of you know how the pelts of water and land mammals have been tempting to mankind in a very artificial way—such as the skins from sea otters adorning the lining of some French purses; in Tibet, to trim robes as a status symbol by the elite—the skins being used as trading tokens throughout a large portion of your civilized world's history, making them, along with other marine life, prized possessions.

Because of their inherent resiliency, they have bounced back from the edges of extinction more than once in the last 300 years. They have also adapted to changes within their habitat (which many species have done or not), and what is remarkable is that they do so without complaint. Yes, I said that river and sea otters have adapted to their surroundings and, in some places declining in natural resources over the course of your history, with an air of carefree abandon. In some ways, they are the epitome of peace and calm without having to take a tranquilizer. Much of your human world would learn much by studying the ways of the otters.

5. River Nile Crocodile

Primary Habitat on Earth: African continent

Contrast—that is the great magnificence of Source—contrast among all living beings and the animal kingdom of which we speak. The contrast I am alluding to is the cute, playful, soft features and behavior of the sea and river otters we just examined, moving now to study another water animal, that being the anything-but-playful, rather the fearsome, Nile crocodile. Perhaps some of you would prefer me to go into greater detail about tiny goldfish, of which there are many varieties—a comet goldfish, a lion head, black moor, fantail, or other variety. Some of you may prefer me to speak about colorful Japanese Koi fish, of which there are many varieties—hikari, muji, tancho, kormor, bekko, and butterfly koi, to name a few. Very few, to my knowledge, have prayed for a Nile crocodile to snuggle up to and inhabit their home and, for this reason exactly, I am choosing to present the species now.

Before I continue, asking me which species of the water I deem most unusual, amazing, wonderful, most well adapted and so on is a bit like asking me which one of you is the most sacred. Sacred divinity is in every living, breathing thing. It IS every living creation. In subsequent teaching, when we examine the plant kingdoms in various volumes, we will continue to explore and rediscover Source's majesty.

If I can help dispel fear and loathing of some of the animals on your wonderful Mother Earth, then I will have accomplished one one-millionth of my intention. If and when mankind will derive his or her food source and total source of sustenance without involving the animal kingdom; rather, continue to learn from the animal kingdom, it will be a glorious day in my kingdom!

Some impressions are more difficult to shift than others. Some realities are more difficult to shift than others if the outer world controls the inner world. Of course, much of mankind's impressions about Nile crocodiles were and have been influenced throughout the ages, just as mankind's impressions of the grizzly bear, the saber-toothed tiger, and stories of the great white shark eating men whole have sensationalized much of the animal kingdom, especially those mammals in the water or those like the Nile crocodile.

I am not suggesting that fatalities have not occurred between man and animal. That would be a foolhardy statement. But I offer that much of the fatal and near fatal interactions between "beast" and "man" are a result of threats made to the animal's habitat, food source, or both, or examples of man's greed.

The magnificence of the Nile crocodile, as I suggest, may be seen partly through its adaptations throughout your Earthly history. In prehistoric times, many species of crocodiles and alligators and Gila monsters had no teeth. They were plant eaters, not meat eaters. As conditions on your planet continued to change and shift due to forces outside of Mother Earth, much of the plant sources of nutrition died off. It was a matter of survival for not only this species but for others on your planet, as well as that they were originally created as plant eaters, and had to adapt to find other sustainable sources of food. Resourcefulness is a virtue. Therefore, I am choosing to present the Nile crocodile for your examination as one of the most resilient and resourceful creatures on your planet.

Additionally, if I shared that most meat eating animals of the water, land, and air were all intended at one time to be plant eating or to derive their complete sustenance through their scales from pure water particles, through their feet, or by absorbing through their feathers by the molecules of divine perfection, I wonder if I have built your trust further, or have diminished it?

Some, of course, do see beauty in all things. Some have such pure and loving hearts that when they see any water animal, any living being, they see only love. Much of what your world has been taught about “survival” of species only came about after the Fall. This was not God’s, Allah’s, Supreme Being’s plan to have any use or concept for the word survival—especially survival of the fittest. That is a tainted, mankind paradigm. Here is another one: “Only the strong survive.” This is still being bandied about in your outer world as weak versus strong. There is no such thing. Divine perfection means that everyone, everything, every animal, even the Nile crocodile has Divine Order within them, and should be treated with respect, care, love and acceptance.

This, by the way, is not a spiritual “lofty” concept presented to your minds to be the way of your world 200, 300, or 400 years into the future. It is happening now, bit by bit, little by little, as love replaces fear! I share with your minds to consider that the Nile crocodile, as our example, will not be feared in the years to come and, as such, their fear will diminish and, as such, their teeth will start to soften and they will once again return to Source to be able to sustain themselves wholly through plants and nutrition that have been “super packed” with nutrients for the Ascension of your planet. Many living beings are coming together to hold the force field of love on your planet once again. Each of you who are reading these words is also contributing to this effort. Praise yourselves! Even if some of the concepts I am sharing may seem foreign to you, lovingly affirm: Change is coming and change is good or refer back to the prayer at the beginning of this book.

Something you may find interesting about the Nile crocodile, in addition, is that they are one of the most creative animals in Mother/Father God’s kingdom. Here is a real life example: I have witnessed many young Nile crocodiles contemplate how they are going to build their nests. This can be quite challenging for some of them because these nest-building ideas, as I see them, are very unique as each of you might have different ideas about how to build one’s home. The scientists of our community may say this is foolishness, that they are genetically taught, or nurtured to learn how to build nests, hunt, etc. This is not complete truth. They are original thinkers and master builders, whether they are given the opportunity or not. Their nest-building ideas are impressive by anyone's standards. They are able to see things for what they are. This is a blessing of many species in the animal world. They are more connected with Mother Earth, and, as such, draw from her eternal source like a battery draws power from a charge.

The eyesight of the Nile crocodile is also interesting to note. The spectrum of light color that they can see rests in a spectrum outside of the human spectrum (which, by the way, is also evolving and returning to pure love with more light spectrums already being seen by some of the Indigo, Rainbow, Crystalline plants, animals, and Starseeds on your planet today.) A typical Nile crocodile, even the older ones, are able to see electric currents of magnetic energy, and they use this developed sight to help them learn where safety is and where safety isn't. It's calibrated to them in decibels (sound), and microns (filaments of light measurement) similar to a tube of light, if you will. They can also use this enhanced eyesight to change particle matter.

The younger Nile crocodiles and other species living in other regions of your world under the age of six or seven were born with what is referred to as a third or "psychic eye," so developed that it rivals anything in modern man. However, the "psychic eye," or sixth sense knowing, is nothing more than returning to Source as a clear, open vessel. One point remaining is that they choose to use their heightened vision to heal what they see as being out of balance in their world—in some cases, their polluted water; in some cases, their depleted ground; in some cases, other species of water life particularly that they can see as being devoid or depleted of light. Meaning that they can identify sick fish—sick and imbalanced marine life—for the purpose of healing them. Now, this statement I know may need time to be absorbed. Their teeth are the least noticeable element about them, I say, and will be retracting to non-use in the decades to come.

Styles of Communication by Water Animals

I've been asked to comment upon the way water animals communicate with each other. With over a million different water species, each with the ability to communicate with their own one-of-a-kind pattern, it would almost be an impossibility to present all of them in this book. Instead, I would like to share some wisdom as I see and know it, and allow each of you to dig more fully into any and all species not identified here. In subsequent volumes, we will continue to open the doorways for further knowing.

I suppose the most common form of expression across all the animal kingdom is sound. Sound is expanding within the animal kingdom as all things expand. This statement must be made before continuing, so that we center ourselves in the past, the present, and future. How is this done? Through sound. Sound communication is one means of connecting from marine animal to marine animal, species to species. Sound and tone to me are not the same. The tone a sound makes is referred to as harmony. Therefore, across the water animals, there is a wide range of harmonic frequencies, as well as tones which are intended to present warning messages. We will examine these first.

Warning messages of the water moccasin. How will I describe the warning tone of a water moccasin? You guessed it! Through a harmonic code. ♥ The harmonic code to alert another water moccasin that danger is near is 55 66.

It is similar to a low, rumbling thunderstorm you may hear in the distance. Not all tones used to communicate that danger is approaching can be described this way, any more than I can say that all fish are the same. Every living creature as I know it, even a soft-shell hermit crab, was equipped to make a tone or have a vocal response. Not all water animals use this ability, but it was hard-wired into their consciousness from the beginning. It may surprise some of you to learn that the loudest sounding water animal is the beluga whale. This whale above all others has multiple sound chambers built within its massive frame. It is indeed like a concert chamber hall created by the Master of Creation to resonate further and wider than any other water animal as I know it—yes, even further than the sonar echolocation of dolphins.

I would encourage those of you who have not heard and really listened to nature to embrace the healing powers that it has. Many water animals, as well as land and air animals, emit sounds to help elevate the planet and have nothing whatsoever to do with signaling a mate that it's mating time or for signaling where the food source is or signaling "I'm lonely."

There are over 8 million different sound combinations which the water animals on your Earth can emit. This includes sounds and tones not heard by the human ear. Water animals globally have a special heart valve which enables them to make these tones. A salmon has this, a perch has this, a yellow-finned tuna has this, a mako shark has this, as well as many of the mollusks, clams, and other shellfish. Jellyfish may not be known in your world, for example, for being capable of emitting a tone, but they do from time to time. Just as with humans, some animals and animal species are chattier than others; some species need to be more “vocal” while others do not. As mentioned, sound is just one tool to communicate behavior.

Q: Can you share more of the reasons why and how water animals use sound?

A: Did you know that water animals can use sound to express joy and laughter? Do you know, dear ones, that water animals across the board within inlets, bays, streams, waters, and ponds across your continent can create sounds that seemingly come from another plane or dimension? Ask anyone who has listened to a loon—both water and land—to verify this, or listen to a blessed recording yourselves.

Q: Are you saying that simple lake trout communicate with sound, angel?

A: Yes. This is what I am sharing.

Q: For what purpose?

A: For the purpose of indicating dominance. Sound is also used by some water species to indicate dominance and sub ordinance. No surprise here if we turn our gaze to the land animals and witness the roar of a mighty lion or the grunting of a lowland gorilla.

Fish like minnows (very small fish that are often used as bait to catch larger fish) have sound vibrational energy particles that swish off their dorsal fin. The sound is created not by what mechanism lies within their bodies, but by the touching with their outer world—in this case, the water in which they live. There is an interesting phenomenon which occurs also when certain species swim in a certain pattern in certain waters of your world—they are creating energy spirals and these spirals make sound as they spin and spin and spread throughout the water. Each body of water, by the way, is governed by water nymphs, and the primary job of the water nymphs is to harness the power of sound and assist in carrying it through the water molecules. Often, silver-colored minnows rely heavily on sound frequency to know where they are going, to hear and feel the biorhythms of the electromagnetic fields that pulse through the waters in which they swim.

Many water species that swim through your various waters are purposely creating tones, even when they splash, to connect with the harmonic grid of Mother Earth for a wide array of reasons. Connecting by splashing in the waters of your Mother Earth, with the assistance of the water nymphs, allows many species of all sizes to become one. Through splashing and the tonal frequencies; splashing creates the energy which runs through a marlin, which is the same as the frequency that supports a red herring. What is the purpose of this? To restore them energetically. Therefore, your minds may be asking, “What robs a fish of energy, prompting them to splash?” Back to man—pollution, destruction of habitation, overpopulation, and so many of the same things that rob humans of energy, can deplete marine life. Sound pollution is a disturbance for many species as well. So, for some water species, splashing helps calm them.

Dolphins

Dolphins are some of God's most playful creatures

I suppose no introductory sharing of the modes of animal communication could be shared without examining the playful and popular dolphin.

Q: I've read that scientists studying bottlenose dolphins think that each individual dolphin produces its own "signature whistle" that a dolphin develops during the first year of its life. Is this as you see it?

A: This is just the tip of the iceberg, as the saying goes, with what marine dolphins can do with tone. Yes, they do produce their own signature whistle; however, I would place the time within the first few hours of life rather than during their first year. That timeframe underestimates the dolphin and, to some extent, underestimates creation. They can produce the signature whistle of their friends, mimicking what they hear. Compared to the human ear, the hearing of dolphins—no matter what size, what variety, what part of the planet they inhabit—have a whistling vocabulary of about 800 whistles. That's a lot of independent and distinct whistles! Imagine that no two of them are alike, because they are not. And no two whistles mean the same thing. Reflect, dear ones, about the magnificence of this creation.

Q: Can you share with us what scientists may not be able to tell us regarding the meaning of tail slaps and fin slaps?

A: Tail slaps and fin slaps are higher forms of consciousness. By this I mean that they are guided by Christed extraterrestrials. Seen another way, imagine a stream of light encoded energy (as I see it) with 3rd dimensional sacred geometric forms and numbers. This is what tail slaps and fin slaps look like to us in the angelic realms. Many (but not all) slaps are guided by light soldiers telepathically communicating with this species to help them survive; in other cases, to help purify the waters where they dwell. In some cases, the sacred geometry brings up 5th dimensional, 6th dimensional, 9th dimensional consciousness from Telos, the city underneath Mt. Shasta connecting other inner world, highly evolved civilizations. This is a very orchestrated and loving collective movement put into motion by Source for the evolution and ascension of your planet and all who inhabit her. Who else do you think would be responsible for such majesty?

Q: Some people suggest that dolphins are able to share third dimensional images with each other using their echolocation. Can you describe this for us?

A: All species of dolphins are able to do this consciously and with intent. Many times, these 3rd dimensional images are intercepted by those outside of spiritual light to learn what progress is being made on your Earth. When this occurs, the younger dolphins gather around and swim in pods (this is not the only reason they swim in pods); when they swim in small pods of no more than five to six, they are redesigning the image to avoid interception. It's a bit like placing your arm over a homework assignment in class so that your neighbor is not tempted to view it. This is partly why I am including dolphins here for further examination, because of the vital role they play and have played in destroying nefarious energy sources which have attempted to keep your world from ascending—reconnecting to pure Love.

There is still a fair amount of denser energies in the Indian Ocean, the Atlantic Ocean, and the Pacific Ocean. In fact, all of the major ocean waters have more cleaning up to do. The dolphins are one large cog in this wheel of divine intervention. Many delight in creating very complex, highly evolved 3rd dimensional symbols that energetically vibrate on the 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th planes of realities. This does not tire the dolphins, if those of you who know something about energy may be wondering. Again, they as a whole delight in this mission—especially the younger ones.

Like other species who continue to be here for the purpose of transmuting any type of disharmony, the dolphin classification has numbers in the millions. This may come in direct conflict with what your scientific community reasons, but it is so, even with their numbers continuing to grow. Not all of them are visible! What?! Not all of them are visible. Because of their highly developed nature and mission, many of these millions choose to morph their bodies into pure light energy. This explains why my number of dolphins into the millions may not mirror yours.

The speed at which dolphins carry out their healing energetic missions is also hard to fathom. In a split second, or at the speed of light in your world, a pod can transmute (change) dark energy into light. This is also partly due to the density of water being lighter than that of land. We will discuss some of the air and land animals who we see as equivalent species defenders of truth and light as well.

An introductory sharing of dolphin wisdom would not be complete without at least further mention of the knowledge they carry and the importance they have played in your human development. To do this, we first need to go back to the beginning. When the worlds collided and the birth had occurred, Source had decisions to make. In this decision process of what creatures would be created to live on Earth, other decisions pertaining to creation had to be considered, such as how to create life forms hearty enough to survive, though in many circles not considered a “hearty and thriving” species. Dolphins were created during the time of Persephone, the Goddess of Innocence and the Queen of the Underworld. Persephone was the daughter of Zeus and Demeter. Although in history often associated with lakes and streams, Persephone also held command over the oceans of your early world. She shepherded in dozens of species. Think of her as a gatekeeper leading the way and you will have an accurate impression of her. It was only later that she became known as the Spring Goddess.

One of these species was the dolphins. As stated previously, many, if not all, of original creation on your planet looked like a rainbow, contained rainbow frequency and, therefore, so did the early dolphins. They were, from origination and to this present time, encoded with telepathic communication to rival the greatest master. This encoded telepathy allowed them to send mind thoughts to the early gods and goddesses, which still continues to this day. Not all souls know what is being telegraphed (yet), but there will be a day not too distant in your futures where every man, woman, and child, regardless of their culture or belief system, will have clear knowing, and you can partially thank the dolphins and Persephone for holding the gate open. Literally, a gate is a portal to other dimensions. In this case, the portal Persephone held open was the portal to Damascus, a light galaxy hundreds of light years away from your own.

Sharks

Sharks, like dolphins, have a built-in sound chamber within their bodies, which fires off a signal in times of distress. This sound chamber, you can imagine, in many ways is like a wood burning furnace—the wood is describing the way many varieties of sharks communicate using air. By gulping air, many sharks, especially the mako, blue-finned, harbor, and great white sharks, are able to make tones with equal precision, as do the dolphins. The complexities of these sounds might stagger the human mind.

If you understand the theory of relativity, then you also may understand that there are an infinite number of octaves which tone may create. The great white shark, which can be found in the coastal surface waters of all your major oceans, is capable of making roughly about 10,000 harmonic codes through tone. To place the depth of this in your minds, dear souls, liken it to being able to sing effortlessly for five years and never repeat the same sequence of tones for the same communication purpose—this is the approximation of the importance of this knowing.

It's not just the size of the great white shark which allows for the vast number of sound frequencies they are able to make, but rather their conscious evolution.

Which leads me to another teaching—the longer or more evolved a species, the more masterful or complex their tonal capabilities. This “chart” of most evolved species does change, and if you use your creative minds, visualize three years of tones from the great white shark and no two tones are ever the same!

Some of the toning, like many of the dolphin species, comes also from tail flipping, fin flipping, and breaching. Breaching is a means of communication where the marine animal launches itself out of the water, flips, turns, and sometimes spins. This behavior generally, although there are exceptions, creates on the average about 35,000 sacred geometry shapes. Energetic geometry shapes also create tone frequency. They may be thought of most commonly as forms like a tetrahedron, or a spiral, but these sacred geometric shapes also form toning patterns of color, tone, and electromagnetic power.

The Future

The projected future for most of your marine life is for further expansion and rejuvenation. There were many early forms of water life that will be returning to your planet. Imagine a spiny toad with long, long legs like a stork, with a very long neck, as you are starting to visualize the pink platypus. The pink platypus inhabited your world roughly 3 million years ago and will be restored to it in the decades to come. Many of the early marine life forms will be reborn just as your Mother Earth is having a rebirth, so will all the life forms upon her.

Sea nymphs, as we spoke of earlier, are working to unveil some large ocean animals. Many believe in the Loch Ness Monster, and many do not. If I told you that there are at least 25-30 of similar “denizens” of the sea surrounded by myth, soon to be revealed, I hope that I have excited you! Yes, the Loch Ness Monster, dating back to prehistoric times, does still inhabit your world and it is also found outside of Loch Ness. Sightings among monks and doctors, scientists and military officers, policemen and farmers, from fishing boats as well as on land, capture the imagination of many. There are giant squids which are about the length of 15 football fields.

There are dozens and dozens of yet-to-be-discovered huge ocean mammals. In the waters of the South Pacific there is a massive electric eel, yellow in color, which measures 18-20 feet in length. It has existed since the Neolithic Era. When two of these eels rub together, they produce a scale of sound similar to your full scale on a standard piano. They do this for a variety of reasons; one reason is to alert others that danger is near; another reason is to alert and help jellyfish, squid, and other soft-body marine life where they may find food sources.

Your help is still needed to ensure that the future I foretell from Source occurs. Humankind can delay or speed up the pace at which Nirvana within the animal kingdom is once again thriving to the point of overflowing on your planet. Take time to wander among the watersheds, creeks, rivulets, ponds, estuaries, mountain lakes, and world oceans. Breathe life force energy into them with your thought intention. Replace any thought of fear that you may have of any species with love. Be brave. Be accepting.

A domestic yak at Yamdrok Lake, Tibet

CHAPTER 4

Domesticated Animals of the Land

It is nearly impossible in text such as this to examine every species of domesticated land animal God created. Therefore, to give an overview of which species we will examine, I have created the following list:

- | | |
|--------------------------|------------------------|
| ♥ The dog | ♥ The chicken |
| ♥ The sheep | ♥ The lama |
| ♥ The pig, hog, and boar | ♥ The rabbit |
| ♥ The goat | ♥ The horse and donkey |
| ♥ The cow | ♥ The cat |
| ♥ The yak | |

What can I present to the reader that has not been stated before? What can I share here which will inspire those who are insensitive to the domesticated land animals to become more sensitive? And what can I do from my realm to support each of you who are magnificently inspiring examples of the inter-connectedness of life we so often speak of?

A boy's best friend--in this case a French bulldog

Dogs

We begin our exploration of a few species of domesticated land animals with the dog. In some cultures and studies, the dog is referred to as having the characteristics of loyalty, defensiveness, care, and attentiveness to the home. The Chinese zodiac, for those souls unfamiliar, is based on a twelve-year lunar cycle and each year in the cycle related to an animal sign. They are the rat, ox, tiger, rabbit, dragon, snake, horse, sheep, monkey, rooster, dog and pig. You may note that some of these animals I have chosen to include in these pages as well.

There are, at the moment of this writing, about 12,000 dogs within the United States of America, the same number in Canada and within the European Alliance, suffering from malnutrition. In these same countries, in addition, there are about another 12,000 dogs of all sizes and domesticated breeds that have been neglected in some other fashion—that's per region—and another 12,000 who I am seeing as without a home. In these countries, the numbers of out-of-harmony dogs number total near one million: Thailand, Cambodia, and India.

Other countries on your planet where the number of dogs suffering is extraordinary: Mexico, Egypt, Trinidad and Tobago, and China. Neglect and abuse are difficult words for me to use, yet it is imperative that reality speaks! I think many in the world are aware that abuse of dogs is on an upward swing, not a downward swing, but have no real idea what the numbers are. Many stray dogs are also roaming in almost every major inner city. There are a few progressive regions that have taken advancing steps most recently in rectifying this global problem. They are Stockholm, Sweden; Saint Petersburg, Russia; and Belarus, significantly, with other cities (many European) following.

Over the last decade, the rise of atrocities committed by man toward dog has increased globally about 15% worldwide. It has NOT diminished, despite efforts of many light workers, many global heart-centered communities, and many progressive private sector organizations. This is an alarm bell for your world to wake up! I see starving dogs lying with mange, too tired to raise their heads. Now I've said the worst of the worst. I do not intend to speak in greater detail of the other atrocities at this time. Rather, devote more love, more healing codes, and more inspiration to defeat the evil that perpetrates harm upon another living being once and for all.

♥ The harmonic healing code collectively for dogs is 7787 9 22 A 1.

Do I have your global permission to admit you to my Light Army? I have made this request before and I will make it again. Are you, dear ones, ready to take up my sword and my staff and make it your own and help rid the world of animal suffering? Those affirm by stating, “YES!”

Anytime mankind sees an injustice to an animal—land or otherwise—and does nothing to change it, you are adding to the dysfunction.

To continue, every country in your world has some type of issue with domesticated land animals, many known as pets. The countries mentioned were not the only countries where animals are suffering at the hands of man. Every country has some areas of concern for us. To understand how severe the situation is, let me share another example: every three seconds of every day, at least one animal dies due to neglect. Many, if not all, of these cases are preventable. This number is not something I choose to dwell upon. Rather, I choose to dwell upon the here and now; the things man can do to change the direction of this past, and prevent the future flow and destruction of other animals.

To examine the dog specifically, one must go back in time. Imagine a time when dogs were revered globally. Some of your ancient civilizations honored dogs as gods—other early civilizations involving the Incan and Mayans, and even prehistoric civilization, honored dogs of all types as messengers of great telepathic knowledge. Many dogs served as archetypal warriors for the Atlantean and Syrian Alliance. In this role, mankind was seen as the species necessary for evolution—not the dog. As you may come to know, in more recent times, many kings and queens had dogs as beloved and most revered companions. Some examples of this I have witnessed and perhaps one or two examples will deepen this connection.

King Solomon had a special dog companion. His companion was similar to a Pekingese in your world today (yes, species do evolve, as stated earlier). What makes this example so divine is that King Solomon came to your Earth plane to primarily learn the one main lesson of trust. This was a time on your planet where soul charts were very dense with third dimensional lessons either written into them or at a time when many dark forces were busy keeping the animal kingdom repressed, as it had begun to do with humankind after the war. King Solomon ruled the Turkish Empire, and it was a time when empirical rule was not only unholy but it upset many of the cosmic angels and the cosmic plan. This particular dog—whose name escapes me for the moment—let's call Sir Galahad. Sir Galahad was one of the early elevated animal beings sent to Earth by God/Source, created to help heal the energetic destruction lead by the creation of empires. Simply, when one person or region has authority over another, there is a tear in the Divine Plan.

When King Solomon first met Sir Galahad, they formed an immediate bond. Perhaps many of you have formed an immediate bond with a dog or a cat? This bond of mutual respect gave rise to many who would laugh at the king. They said, "King, dear Sir, please excuse us Your Highness, but why are you eating your meal with Sir Galahad at your table?" Which he did do consistently, night after night after night. Now, King Solomon could have used forced to answer these insults or he could have ended his nightly meals with Sir Galahad to please them, but instead, after hearing such “foolishness” over a period of time, the king also began eating his early morning meals with his beloved friend! Hah! But this is not the end of this story.

Upon learning of Sir Galahad’s impending death (because of an infection that could not be healed) he formed a decree, stating that all who come before him should address his beloved dog first.

Given the time in your Earthly history and the climate during this era of empire building, King Solomon and his Pekingese Sir Galahad go down in the annals of angelic lore as one of the finest pure love bonds ever formed between man and dog. Before King Solomon made his own transition to this realm, he pledged his alliance to the one and only God.

If you are wondering how his dog may have helped him learn the lesson of trust, we have to look at another point in your history briefly—that of the time of the Romans. Before one of the revolutions, there was a lot of jealousy and lust between men. It still exists, of course, today. But the link between the Roman Empire—when many slaves heard, “Throw them to the dogs!” as their fate, an angel appeared. That angel was me. I was given the job of helping transport souls whose Earthly fate was to be devoured by dogs. I was humbled to be chosen to work with the dogs to disobey their owners and to respect themselves and repent. It was during one of these missions where I first landed eyes with Sir Galahad.

You see, animals, like humans, can and do choose to reincarnate in the form of differing lives. It was during this early meeting that I saw the crown of thorns over the animal's head. It was then that I was told that this animal had chosen to come to Earth to heal all those it came in contact with. Sir Galahad accomplished his many missions to Earth, for he had more than these two, by touching the laurel wreath which had been placed upon his head energetically and sharing it with those around him. He assisted King Solomon in his later years to learn the lesson of trust as a result of receiving the crown of thorns by being a devoted, loving servant.

Argos

I am advancing us now to the story of Argos. Some of you may be familiar with the story of Argos, from ancient Greece. As the story goes, Argos was indeed, raised as a pup by Odysseus, the King of Ithaca. Argos had incarnated dozens of times previously, and it is the dog's devotion which was applauded. For a period of twenty nine or so years, Odysseus was separated from Argos. Upon his return as the story goes, no one recognized Odysseus from his outward appearance except his dog. It is not so unusual at all, for animals do have a more "hard-wired" mainframe than humans generally. They are often thought of as more advanced by animal communicators with their telepathy and their empathy.

Argos used his telepathic tracking device like a beacon of light to know and follow the whereabouts of his beloved companion several times throughout every day during their separation. Argos also sent healing thought energy to Odysseus and because they were so connected of the heart, Odysseus was able to easily perceive these transmissions. Odysseus also sent healing, prayerful thoughts and blessings to Argos, which Argos also received and integrated. It is said that after giving a last greeting to his master, Argos's life ended abruptly, but this is not exactly the end of this story either. Before Argos's Earthly life ended after being reunited with Odysseus, they played together for hours like children, jumping, romping, and laughing together. Odysseus would sit for hours sharing more of his adventures with Argos and he very much treated him as a young child eager to learn. Argos and Odysseus were reunited in the Kingdom of Heaven and have since chosen to live 5 more Earth lives together, working together, sharing together and playing together.

Q: Angel, we hear of seemingly amazing stories of dogs finding their way back to their owner or guardians over long distances or after long spans of time, how does this happen?

A: As shared, every living life is intelligent and has a consciousness within them. You may only know of half a dozen recent examples of animals being reunited with their families, but this has occurred in every continent in every century since your world was first created. This is accomplished rather easily. As humans, some animals have a more finely tuned navigational system as do some individuals. In other words, some dogs and some species of dogs have an easier time of finding their way back home. Some of the species are English Springer Spaniels, German Shepherds, Bloodhounds and Great Danes, to name a few. It can involve the scent the dog is picking up, but even that is an end result of that particular dog or breed of dog being open to receiving information.

Just as with humans, if a dog or any domesticated land animal is cut off from the life flow current, they do tend to have a greater difficulty locating home, or locating anything either due to their reduced sense of smell, which can decline with age or illness or decline with lower vibrations such as sadness and grief. Being more open vessels also has to do with the heart connection between animal and owner and how much love the pet feels. The newly entering dogs and other land animals are having an overall easier job with not only locating places or people but connecting to all energy matter as a result of this. Some of you with dogs not mentioned or older dogs may consider having a conversation with them about how to find their way home, and remind them how much they are valued so that they are made familiar with this and indeed, have the desire to return.

Soul Chords

Dogs are often known for their heroics and bravery. They do have one altered DNA strand as I see it that allows for this imprint to take hold. It looks like a purplish-bluish band when sometimes seen through a microscope or energetically. Some who know energy well may say that they have never witnessed this strand. I am at peace with this. This altered DNA strand is also seen as a soul chord. Soul chords are also present in every living consciousness...even the SUN. It is no different a concept really, than a particular breed known for certain other traits including hair or coat, temperament and demeanor. Soul chords within animals range in the 7-8 range no matter the size of the dog. Other species of land animals which we will examine have more, while others have fewer soul chords. These chords of life are like particles of the atom, a piece of Infinite Creation. Beauty! You may think of them as personality traits but they are much more than this. They embody cellular codes from their soul charts about what they have chosen to accomplish on the Earth plane. Think of them in part like reminder notes you may make to yourself, and this is another way to think of them. Oh, joy! Oh, wonder!

Perhaps it will be fun to move us into a more recent time frame and speak of another magnificent dog and its' contribution to humanity before examining sheep.

Rin Tin Tin

When we examine the land animals, particularly man's best friend, so many wondrous stories arise. Many of the younger animals are light beings coming to the Earth for the very first time to help your planet ascend. Many others, like the dog popularly known as Rin Tin Tin, are considered "old souls." Perhaps you have heard this expression before? Old souls, for your enrichment, are souls that have cycled through to the Earth plane many times. How many times you may ask—at least fifteen. Yes, in order to be considered an old soul in my realm, a soul, human or animal must have completed at least fifteen incarnations on Earth. Rin Tin Tin, a German shepherd was on his 14th lifetime when we examine this particular life and contribution.

Rin Tin Tin (1918–1932) was a male German shepherd rescued from a World War I battlefield by an American soldier, Lee Duncan, who nicknamed him "Rinty". Duncan trained Rin Tin Tin and obtained silent film work for the dog. Rin Tin Tin was an immediate box office success, gaining worldwide fame. Source: Wikipedia.

Many animals were used during various wars on your planet in a variety of ways. One reason for selecting a brief examination of this animal is to make the statement and reinforce it: One day soon, there will be no further war on your planet, hence, no need to train animals to serve in it!

Rin Tin Tin was indeed rescued from a World War I battlefield, but his life leading up to this moment is of my sharing. Because of his vibration being referred to in my realm as an “old soul”, he was wise—he had learned life lessons in his earlier incarnations by comparison to some canines that had not. Consequently, he was easy to teach, he was already advanced in wisdom and understanding. In addition, because he had surmounted many fear based lessons in previous lives, he was considered very courageous.

(This does not mean that animals and humans with fewer life times do not exhibit knowledge and courage.) Many canines throughout your world history have aided civilian and soldier alike. In many war times, canines were used to send codes among the ranks, they were used as carriers of medical supplies and they were, countless times, responsible for saving thousands of human lives in and out of battle. Rin Tin Tin, as he was later named, was also responsible for saving dozens of human lives as a result of his bravery. He was a very strong animal and was able to pull wounded soldiers from fox holes to receive treatment, and with his keen sense of smell was able to locate where ammunition was stored. This was perceived as incredibly valuable, though it is difficult to speak of anything related to war as valuable.

The stories of Saint Bernards that have painted your landscape are genuine, as this breed did carry and aid many early outdoorsmen and explorers by providing provisions to them. Many, who would have perished from the extremely cold, harsh conditions of Switzerland while traveling from neighbor to neighbor, for example, were rescued from the heroics of this canine breed as well. Many of the breeds of canines exhibit bravery. It is not a genetic thing, however, but more of a cultivated trait. I suppose I would be amiss if I did not also acknowledge libations being carried by these gentle giants of dogs throughout your history.

Sheep

In describing some information about sheep, sheep shearing and sheep herding may come to your immediate minds. Let us look into their evolution as well as examine their valuable contribution to mankind's development. The earliest of all breeds of sheep, as stated in our beginning, were rainbow colored. Some still contain 5th dimensional rainbow frequency within them. If and when they do, most commonly they contain it within their horns. I might rank sheep in the same importance with horses and cattle in the development of your world.

In the earliest of times near the 4th and 5th centuries, the majority of sheep which inhabited your Earth were black in color. It was only later that, with the absorption of all the rainbow colors (energy) within some of the species, that other colors were witnessed, resulting in colors of sheep you may know today. Near the time of Jesus of Nazareth, Jesus of Galilee, sheep herding was the way many of the citizens earned their living. Once mankind discovered the value in wool, sheep were elevated. In other words, their perceived value increased.

Sheep were originally not valued in many civilizations. They were slaughtered for their meat, and that was all. In fact, you may be aware of stories where many animals were devalued as carnal and gluttony and slothfulness were the result. This lack of reverence for life involved boars, oxen, as well as other game and fowl. This period of gluttony to prove status may still be witnessed today, but not nearly to the extent it was in more ancient time as a sign of privilege in many class systems going back as far as the Greek and Roman civilizations. Gluttony and slothfulness as well as other lack of respect for life thankfully progressed since these early days in your world's history. In the early 1700's and in earlier advancing times, sheep started to become prized for their wool and pure beauty and temperament. They were seen less as food sources, as grains and fruits became more staples of the human diet. Of course, many cultures never consume any type of meat.

As your world colonization spread, sheep were introduced in many other lands than where they were originally seeded. Going back again to creation, sheep were seeded near the lands of Palestine, and with the invention and surge of seafaring ship building, along with growing herding practices, their range grew. Many cultures needed clothing of a sustainable nature. Spaniards also played a role in the expansion of the sheep colony by opening navigational routes from the Far East and South America. Sheep shearing in the Scandinavian countries as well as Siberia were also instrumental in caring for, raising and honoring the value of sheep. Great care for the most part was taken with them out of necessity, one would say. If some of you may be wondering, shearing a sheep does not wound the animal in any way. In fact, if their wool is not removed it does cause an entire breakdown of their system. It may take years for this to occur, but as the consciousness of the sheep collective raised from gluttony to usefulness of warmth for blankets, clothing, they were able as a species to adapt, often called genetic adaptation by your scientists, to grow a thicker or thinner coat, depending.

Said another way, the earliest sheep had a much thinner coat than the sheep of today. If you have an opportunity to learn how to shear a sheep properly, many of you will find a delight in doing this. I invite you to interact with animals in new ways that might be outside of your comfort zone. Along with the silkworm and the silkworm trade, though not officially a domestic land animal, we must honor the silkworm also for opening trade routes and advancing civilization on your planet. Do you think dear ones that your world would have survived without the animal kingdom? Of course not.

Pigs, Hogs, Boars

The next domesticated land animal to honor are the pigs, the boars, the hogs. So many sayings have been created in your world. Some of them, “Your face looks like a pig, you have the nose of a pig, you are a pig, clean your room, it looks like a pig sty, you are as slippery as a hog,” and others do nothing to honor you who have made these statements or to those on the receiving end, nor to the hogs. Believe it or not, of the many of the thoughts received in my kingdom defaming animals, it seems as if the pig is mocked more than almost any other land animal we are to examine here. Certainly, evolving friends, there are gentler, kinder ways to share sentiments with one another. Kindly bring your awareness to this if I am speaking to you. Have you ever taken time to watch a wild boar in action? Some capture them and train them to move wood; hence my inclusion here as a domesticated animal, though certainly not to the extent of dogs, cats and rabbits. The wild boar popularity is on the decline and has been since the early 1920's despite efforts to restore this species. They, like many animals, are misunderstood. Yes, boars and other rooting animals can do much damage to plowed fields, grasslands and to the plant kingdom, but they also do much good. It is for this reason also that I would like to honor them.

Wild boars are still used by some Aboriginal tribes to help them root many varieties of tubers and plants in order to help sustain that culture. Other tribesmen in South America, Mexico and Guatemala respect the wild boar but do not necessarily fear it. Fear will only intensify what may be perceived as destructive behavior. It is my hope that, if nothing else, during the sharing of this text you will have a new found appreciation for all life forms.

Wild boars throughout much of your history were/are hated, feared, tortured and used for sport, tossed to lions and tigers for the mere pleasure derived from watching one animal pitted against another. There are still pockets on your planet that hunt boar to capture, and to continue with this "sport". For boars which are truly wild like the Chupacabra, there are hybrids which the dark forces tampered with to induce fear into man. They are hard wired to be aggressive. Ninety-nine percent of animals have had some type of implant or other energetic device encoded into their DNA at the time of separation or the fall from Grace, by those outside of light, to be aggressive.

Generally, the largest, strongest, fastest animals were chosen for this. Few goldfish or box turtles were deemed worthy by nature of their creation to be implanted with aggression. However, I would ascertain that the species known as Piranha, though not large, were not originally created to be furious. I am speaking of heightened abnormal aggression within certain species. God did not create animals or man to be aggressive. Orchestrated fighting among animals for human gain still exists, sadly. Many rural areas, especially where monitoring and enforcing of this type of behavior is limited, find entertainment in these types of minimization of life. Cock fighting, bull fighting, fox hunting are examples of worldwide disrespect for life.

Let us pray:

“To all those who continue to use any animal in fighting for monetary gain, sport, we send you our loving prayers to end this action now. We command it in the name of our Infinite Creator.”—Amen, Shalom, Namaste

Goats

Goats and particularly Nubian goats are wonderfully imaginative creatures, if you have ever encountered one you will agree. While the species is presently widely colorful and varied, new forms are being created in other realms to be seeded on your planet within the next decade. Many of you may have been introduced to farm animals like sheep, goats, dogs, pigs, ducks through the stories you read as a young child. Many impressions still linger in the subconscious mind. Billy Goat Gruff is one example. Goats throughout literature many times have not been so favorably portrayed. In more recent decades, however, greater appreciation for them is being nurtured. Goat milk, goat cheese, goat soap, and many other products in your modern world have come from the goat. Heroic in nature, the Shamans of the world view the goat as a sacred totem animal.

In Chinese lore, the wisdom of the goat, in simplest terms, is durability, head strong or determined. If you were born under the year of the goat and following the Chinese zodiac, it is taught among other things that you are wise, gentle and compassionate, able to cope with business cautiously.

Goat herding is still active and alive in many parts of the world. Though goats tend to stir up a lot of passionate feelings within humans as do other animals, goats are hearty and have withstood years of abuse and neglect. Therefore, they too, are to be honored.

♥ To send a healing harmonic code to goats collectively, the code would be: 111 999 555 222.

Massai Herdsman, Serengeti

Goats are notorious for eating anything—tin cans, your prized flowers; scientists have discovered plastic containers of all types in their bellies--coffee cans, cups, saucers, metal objects, to name a few of the manmade by-products. This is partly due to the large stomach they have and their digestive ability. They are also often obtained for domesticity with the intent to “mow” or chew down the grasses of lawns, pastures and even woodland forests. In this service, they also can help keep the insect population in check. They are also attracted to moths, worms, caterpillars, ants and other insects, which can be detrimental to some crops when their numbers exceed the normal natural biology of the life cycle. However, their numbers should be regulated generally unless the intent is to use them to clear entire fields. In fact, many early homesteaders in North America used goats almost exclusively for this purpose.

Cows, Cattle and Yaks

Next, let us visit the cow, cattle and the yak since they present similar information. All of these species were all also greatly responsible for the growth of your civilizations and still remain in this possession. Since the earliest of times these 4-legged friends have been under intense scrutiny by outer world rule. Why is this? Because of their usefulness to mankind becoming independent beings. Those in dark authority, once again, held your planet in suppression in ways already described. When they looked at the cattle and yaks, they were especially alarmed by their gentle nature and worked energetically to interfere.

However, comparatively speaking, these species were able to become domesticated by man largely untouched. In earliest of times, in the region known as Lithuania, cattle were perceived to hold magical power. In the lands of Egypt and early Mesopotamia they were sacred Gods. Elaborate ceremonies were conducted to honor them. In Tibet and other parts of the Old World, they were known as Old Souls, much of this belief passed down from the early Gods and Goddesses of Greece, Rome and Egypt. One has only to look at a sarcophagus or early cave paintings, or exam early pottery dating back to 30 B.C to see reference to these animals. Some of these references came into being also as a result of Christed extraterrestrials showing these animals in visions. Earliest of man saw hooved animals with wings and felt that they were a sign of Godliness and light. However, one has also considered and referred to these animals as Beasts of Burden.

Certainly, your world has enslaved more than its fellow man. Enslavement and inhumanity to these creatures does still exist. The expression “Beast of Burden” originated near about the 5th Century when noblemen would sometimes refer to their concubines derogatorily as “Beasts of Burden”, and referred to men as swine. I am sure your minds can go to other unloving statements if given the time. Many cattle, cows, oxen and other yoked animals gave willingly, however, of their service without complaint. I received very few cries for help from them even though at times it would have been worthy.

In modern times, those known as ranchers in North America or Gauchos of South America, are very reliant on cattle to sustain them in many ways, not just economically, and I see that the children of your world are fascinated by their varied colors and sounding “Moo,” in many school settings. In fact, sometimes the word “Moo” precedes “MaMa” and “DaDa.”

Q: Archangel Michael can you describe how these species of domesticated animals communicate with one another?

A: Among the over 800 species of cattle which exist in nearly every country on your planet, the most common means of nonverbal communication within these 4-legged creatures is by either their tongues or their tails. Similarly to tail flapping within some of the water mammals, cattle also use their tails to communicate. They are not just swatting away flies with them. Perhaps an example to illustrate this would be helpful. Tail communication may be considered subtle to watch and observe, but the average cow can make 15 or 16 distinct communications within a herd. You can increase the number of nonverbal cues of communication by double if you pair it with the action of a cow’s tongue.

When a cow is in distress, surely it will make vocal sounds, but it will also move its tail in a clockwise direction first, followed by a swaying back and forth, back and forth along with rocking their bodies. This is most prevalent in the species of cattle which occupy France, Italy, Spain and Portugal. Cattle in South America, by comparison, because of the way they were seeded originally tend to flap their ears during times of distress.

♥ A harmonic healing code to help ease the stress of the milking cows on your planet would be: 7787 repeated twice: 7787 7787. Milking cows have the highest stress vibration of any of the species presented here because of the process of producing milk. It may seem as though beef cows would have the highest vibration generally showing more stress and fear, but nearly two to one, milking cows demonstrate more. When any animal used for human consumption is stressed, they produce a stress hormone which is then shared as a by-product...milk in milking cows and beef for cattle.

Chickens and Related Domesticated Fowl

Chickens, hens, roosters, and cocks are just some of the species in this category of domesticated land animals. Chicken is the most consumed meat on your planet today. Many of you know chickens in the form of the chicken you eat--chicken cacciatore, chicken patties, chicken parmesan, chicken marsalla, chicken with chick peas and ginger, chicken and dumplings, fried chicken, savory chicken, chicken newberg, hot braised chicken, chicken croquette, not to mention chicken livers, chicken beaks and chicken claws. In some cultures eating certain parts of a chicken signifies strength, or is said to enhance virility; for some, it is forbidden.

There are hundreds of breeds of chickens and guineas. All are interesting and unique in their own ways. Many are natural watchdogs and can be found on farms. Caged birds for human consumption secrete a hormone or rather a pheromone, which tells the other caged birds of their unhappiness. My intent is not to make life difficult for all farms of your world—quite the contrary. Many are advancing the ways in which they honor the fowl raised for consumption using what is termed “free range.” One of the most pressing matters at hand is the “sport” called cock fighting. Streets in India, in Bangladesh, alleys and barns in Nebraska, Tennessee, barrios in Mexico, Chile and Argentina are among the regions greatly affected though there are many more.

I ask for your collective heart-centered intent on the following:

“We ask in the name of Source that all those involved in the inhumane activity of cock and other fowl fighting to stop this immediately in the name of the highest consciousnesses of the land.”—Amen, Shalom, Namaste

♥ The harmonic healing code for fowl collectively is: 2222227.

Llamas

How many of you realize that llamas were first introduced in the grasslands or plain lands of the Old World, known then as Constantinople? I am not speaking of the first creation, of course, but whenever species of animals are introduced to a region they are either seen in my world as having been implanted or seeded in a region, or they migrated. Thousands of years ago, some of the animal species we have been examining were actually released from the Hollow Earth; others were brought into new regions by mankind's movements. Llamas and camels are ancient looking land animals and have been domesticated for thousands of years to help mankind survive. Llamas make an unusual clicking sound with their tongues in a variety of ways and tones. One such means is to alert others in the herd of danger. The series of clicks with their tongues have a language all of their own.

When a llama clicks very rapidly, they are trying to signify immediate danger; when the clicks are slow and deliberate they are communicating that danger has passed. There are even other mouth sounds that llamas and camels make to signify where food is located. Most llamas can produce about 1500 different or unique tones/sounds with their mouths and tongues. This is their primary communication tool. There are brown llamas, white llamas, beige llamas, black llamas, albino llamas; medium and light gray types, even a reddish colored llama.

Q: What do the soul chords of llamas look like?

A: Every animal species does have soul chords. Soul chords are energetic imprints of the essence of each species. Just as with human soul chords, those of llamas and any animal can and do become dysfunctional. The degree to which a llama's soul chords become dysfunctional, for example, has to do with how much TLC or tender loving care they received (or didn't) in their lives. Throughout your Earthly history, llamas have been used as pack animals to enter some of the most difficult terrain. The wool of llamas, camels and alpacas, which are a closely related species, has also supported mankind's development and still does. Starting an alpaca farm is growing in popularity in recent decades, and is expected to rise as a viable source of income for individuals interested in the aspects of animal farming. By and large, animals of this size possess 16-20 soul chords or energy statements that run the length of their energy bodies.

Llamas in Peru

Many shamans of Peru are able to view these energetic soul chords with what is often referred to as “the third eye.” This can be extremely useful to see energy, especially when dealing with the domesticated land animals as, under normal circumstances, alpacas and llamas do not outwardly show when they are in distress.

Perhaps a story from long ago will inspire your vivid collective imaginations and ignite a new found appreciation for llamas and alpaca?

I am choosing to look into your world near the year 1560 and taking us back in time to the Peruvian jungles. During this time, llamas and alpacas were used almost exclusively to transport goods—goods like cloth, coffee and spices such as frankincense and myrrh. These animals also helped transport herbal remedies to souls living deep in the Peruvian jungle. Imagine native tribesmen with blow darts and feather dresses roaming like nomads from region to region or village to village with these animals at their sides. Now imagine wars going on between the various tribesmen over the best stock of the llamas. Many times llamas and alpacas were so highly prized that local wars broke out over them. It was not unusual for a high priest to have 15 to 35 prized llamas and alpacas. In fact, the larger the number of animals a tribe had, the higher the ranking of the priest. At this time these animals were also prized as bringing good fortune.

Elaborate ceremonies were performed around the animals, and it was believed that if an animal lay down during one of these rituals, the gods were pleased with the tribe and blessings were to follow. Many were adorned with costumes and beads said to invoke certain spirits. The white llama and alpaca were especially prized and, should one possess a true albino llama, it was believed to be the best omen of things to come. Give thanks, friends, for the next time you wear an alpaca garment or an angora one, which leads us to our next domesticated land animal—the rabbit.

Rabbits

In medieval times, rabbits were considered a delicacy for the elite or aristocracy as well as for the poorest of the poor. Throughout your history, rabbits are steeped in all sorts of folklore and superstitions representing good luck, bad luck and, certainly, many in your world consider a rabbit's foot as a symbol to encourage good luck. In medieval times the aristocracy preferred rabbit stew, while the disadvantaged often foraged and hunted rabbits for every last ounce they could use...rabbit fur, rabbit as game, rabbits as symbols for the occult.

Rabbits have also been glorified in folk lore as magical, mystical creatures and referred to as tricksters. In Jewish folklore, rabbits are associated with cowardice. In children's story books, movies and literature rabbits are often the first introduction young souls have to the animal world. Domesticated rabbits do indeed make excellent pets for children if they are handled early in their lives. Dwarf rabbits are growing in popularity as pets. Ask almost any child to hop, hop, hop like a rabbit, or recall from your own childhood what it was like to do so and the memory should be very pleasant. Many know the story of the tortoise and the hare, a close relative of the rabbit, or the tale of Peter Cottontail.

Rabbits conjure up images of speed, cunning, soft, cuddly creatures and indeed, many of them are such. However, there is one domesticated rabbit by the name of Oliver, which I would like to describe now. Oliver was a spotted rabbit owned by a young girl in West Virginia near about the years 1938 to 1943. During this time the young girl was studying magic to the delight of her parents. During her exploration of magic and magic tricks, she discovered the idea of “pulling a live rabbit” from a hat. This idea became an obsession for the young girl. She searched the woods near her home day and night, night and day for over 30 days hoping to capture a rabbit to use for this trick.

What makes this story remarkable in some ways is the manner in which she was able to capture it. She did not set a trap, nor did anyone else set a trap to snare the rabbit. Instead, she sat patiently in her family's outer garden for hours on end, calling out to her make believe rabbit she named Oliver. Some days she would pick some lettuce from her family's garden and hold it in her hand, calling out loud “Oliver, oh, Oliver, I have something for you.” Day after day no rabbit appeared until finally, near dusk when she was beginning to lose all hope, out from the shadows hopped Oliver. Oliver McGiver was his full name, and Oliver McGiver hopped almost into the young girl's lap and from there they had the most wonderful conversation.

It was agreed upon that Oliver would contribute to being pulled out from a hat, and in return she agreed to give him a permanent home. His ears were white and the rest of his fur was all black. When the young girl greeted her parents with her new found friend, they exclaimed “Why, Alice, you do know how to speak to animals! How marvelous. What did you say to finally find one?” Alice replied, “I left it up to God.” And so it was. ♥

Rabbit Show Jumping

♥ The harmonic healing code to send to rabbits collectively is: 999 172 355

Please pray for the re-colonization of the rabbit colonies:

“We honor all life. We ask holy ones for your help in re-colonizing the rabbit population and we also ask that your Divine Intervention be granted for any who are using the rabbit population purely for monetary gain. We ask that all those who wish to use body parts of the rabbit to adorn themselves to stop this practice now.”—Amen, Shalom, Namaste

Equines

Our next examination will be of the equines, consisting of donkeys, horses, ponies and mules. One might suppose that an entire text could be written on one species alone. In fact, this has been done hundreds of times and will continue to be done. I, however, am choosing to present a volume series ultimately with her cooperation, and have as such chosen to examine the following breeds here— draft horses, also known as carthorses, work horses or heavy horses, donkeys, and squire or sport horses.

Draft Horse

I have a great affinity for equines of all sizes and dominions. It is so easy to love all life! It was largely the draft horse which was responsible for the colonization of your world. Long, long ago when the Great Creator was creating, Mother, Father God knew that a hearty 4-legged animal ready to be domesticated by mankind would be necessary for their (your) survival. However, this is not to say that early draft horses were sturdy. Many times they were easily plagued by plagues, in early times when used by the Turks and the Finnish, many varieties of draft horses succumbed to illnesses and perished. Roughly 16 species of draft horses have disappeared off the face of your earth over time. However, 29 newer species have arisen. It is more eternal hope that reading this material will reawaken mankind's love and appreciate for all living beings, as stated previously. ♥ Love restores species to your planet and allows for new species to continue arriving.

Hungarian draft horses throughout earthly history have been used in some of the most remarkable, almost ingenious ways, which I would like to examine at this time. The year in your history matters not, what does perhaps matter is the acceptance that, without the Creator creating the disposition of their species your world would not have developed as it did. The ingenious part, particularly of the Hungarian draft horses, was the way they were handled. The ingenious method of handling them is what I find so fascinating. For those of you who think that "The horse whisperer" is a new phenomenon, please re-examine.

Thousands of years ago, not only in Hungary but all over your planet, to various degrees there have always been souls on Earth who knew how to telepathically and with body language guide animals as well as be guided by them. I would state that the collective consciousness of Hungary near and about the 11th century was such that many souls knew how to communicate with their draft horses and did so regularly. How did they know? Who taught them? Your answer lies in this simple statement: some learned through their dream state by the guides of the animals themselves. Yes! How wondrous!

For you see, in order for animal guides to communicate to anyone, the collective or group consciousness of either the groups caring for the animals and/or the region in which the animals reside must be high enough to accommodate this.

Said another way—the belief, the faith, the trust, that telecommunication with the spirit world, and particularly the animal kingdom, must be honored and respected, and during this early time on your planet it was. In fact, I would be hard pressed to find too many souls during this time that did not regularly practice transcendental meditation on a regular basis and consider being connected to their animals of utmost importance. This is an undercurrent which still exists in Hungary today—the undercurrent that listening, allowing, and accepting guidance from your animal and/or their own animal guides is an invaluable way to work with them.

The essence of the draft horse, of which they are many varieties, is strength. The essence of anything is the same as the soul of something. So, to say that the soul of draft horses is strength (and implied power) would be spiritually correct. When individuals in Hungary did and still do listen for signs from their draft horses, they are honoring their soul. Many times, draft horses expressed to those who owned them that they did not feel well on any given day, or that they were depleted from working and plowing the fields yet again. Those wise souls connecting with their animals would rest the herd or rest the individual. This is what makes this region, this time in the development of the draft horse valuable—the huge number of souls listening to what their animal companion was telling them. By doing so, much more work was done in an inspiring way.

Why must I choose to speak about animals being inspired? Because it is to your advantage to see that all animal species have the capability to inspire! As time went on, the draft horses' collective consciousness, one of being inspired, spread to other regions. This is also of great spiritual significance, for without the strength of draft horses being inspired and those working with them in certain regions (Hungary was not the only region; France, Germany, Belgium are other early examples) being inspired, many empires in your world would never have developed.

This is what we refer to as Dominion. Dominion means Oneness, and the Oneness of the draft horse and their companions helped sustain many who would have otherwise perished.

There have always been pockets of enlightened thinking in your world regarding animals. In the earliest of times, the equine colony was taken advantage of (and to some extent today, which I will speak upon). However, because the “essence” of the draft horse particularly was and will ever remain strength, the species thrived. You see, entire species have essences and some essences are more susceptible to interference than others.

Allow me to share some of the other domesticated land animal essences and see if you can identify which species I am speaking of:

—Purity, Calm, Obedience, Dedication, Loyalty, Cleverness, Humility, Compassion.

Have you been able to assign some land animals to these frequencies? Good. Then I am making progress.

Hee-Haw!

Donkeys

There are more than 40 million donkeys in the world, mostly in underdeveloped countries, where they are used principally as draught or pack animals. Some of the different breeds are Abyssinian, the Ethiopian Donkey, the Cordovan Donkey, Miniature Mediterranean Donkey and the Poitou Donkey. Working donkeys are often associated with those living at or below subsistence levels. Small numbers of donkeys are kept for breeding or as pets in developed countries. Asses were first domesticated around 3000 BC, probably in Egypt or Mesopotamia, and have spread around the world. Source: Wikipedia

Please consider reciting the following prayer:

“I am asking for light to be cast upon those donkeys and mules that have lost their hearing due to long exposure to missiles and other forms of destruction.”—Amen, Shalom, Namaste

Throughout your history, as I see it, the most common condition affecting these animals far and away has not been starvation, has not been conditions affecting their coats nor their hooves, but their hearing, beginning with the Turks and Romans. Let me explain.

Surely, angel, you jest when you suggest that missiles existed during these times on our planet, but notice I mentioned, and other forms of destruction. Not readily available to the masses is the notion that sound was a form of warfare going back as far the Ottoman-Turkish Empire.

The sound used during this time was sirens. Sirens are still used in warfare and as a means of gaining attention. Warning sirens are used today. During this period, siren warfare through the use of high pitched wailing was used as a tool of destruction, distraction and desecration. Repeated use of the frequencies employed, combined with the ultra hearing sensitivities of these breeds, rendered many of them useless over time. Many in fact went insane as a result of the tones used.

Yes, animals can go insane as do some humans. Even before the Ottoman-Turkish Empire, a different form of donkeys and mules existed in Atlantis, and in the other underground civilizations. If anyone has ever heard or imagined the “sound of a siren,” from the early Greek civilizations, or have heard the expression “the siren’s song”, then perhaps you will understand what I am attempting to share. Because these animals are rooted to Mother Earth with four feet, they are able to feel tone vibration more fully than some other species.

Conversely, if one desired to elevate their donkey or mule, one would play flute music very sparingly. In your ancient history, those who relied on donkeys and mules to transport equipment, pottery and other wares were largely uneducated about the damage certain sounds were capable of producing. What tended to happen was that once their “beast of burden” lost their hearing, they were viewed as stubborn; hence, the expression surfaced later, “stubborn as a mule.” By nature, mules, jacks, donkeys are not stubborn. They are reacting to sound.

They do as a collective species, respond favorably to smell. So, in your present day, if one were to find themselves working with “a stubborn mule,” you might try running coriander, or mint or peppermint leaves under their noses after becoming discerning about outside noise.

♥ The collective harmonic healing code for domesticated donkeys is: 998 119 236 5

Q: Are there some domesticated species nearing extinction?

A: Yes, there are. However, many were pulled from the brinks of extinction as the expression goes, by loving families whose desire is to repopulate the species. This is occurring in tiny hamlets, as well as in bungalows in Thailand, as well as in large farms especially in South and Central America. In some cases, the donkeys, including miniature donkeys, are purely and totally being cared for as pets with no work of any type asked of them. And this they enjoy.

Are they still used for pack excursions into the wilderness? Absolutely so. But as a collective species they have fared better than many because of their soul essence. Some are being used today to aid in leading independent and funded scientific explorations to uncover valuable resources in your world. This is a wise use of the species, as many horses, ponies, mules, jennies and the like are able to connect with the inner core magnetic field of Mother Earth and often lead the “explorations” to the rich mineral deposits they are seeking.

They are able to do this through their keen sense of hearing if it has not been damaged. Their hearing is able to pick up energetically frequencies of magnetic fields, and some are even able to predetermine which minerals are near the surface and more easily able to be uncovered. They do this without any instruction by those who guide them. This is another example of when a mule or donkey may be referred to as stubborn, because they are using their highly developed senses to draw energy from the ground.

When they sense these spots or areas, often while a soul is riding them, they are known to stop. They are stopped, largely not because they do not want to do what is being asked of them, but because it feels good to them to run the energy currents of many minerals through their light or energy bodies. Think of it like when you may enjoy sitting outside in the sun. It is a very similar thing. Why not allow them to soak in all the restorative energies Mother Earth is sharing rather than whipping, tugging, or otherwise jerking them to leave the spot? They will not absorb too much “fuel” energy as they know when they’ve integrated enough. You may always use your loving words and say, “Friend, I understand that you are drawing energy up from this rich spot, but can we kindly move on when you are complete?”

Squire Horses—The Earliest Times

Anyone from any time on Earth who has ever ridden a horse will understand the following statement: “I feel so much peace when I am with a horse.” Anyone who has ever fallen off a horse has most likely stated, “They scare me. I’ll never ride another horse.” To those who have ridden any of the equine family, please reconsider reframing that thought consciousness to “I learned a lesson to respect all animals”, to help heal those collection of energy statements made throughout time.

Squire horses throughout your history have been owned by the elite. Do you know what squire means? The word squire to me means being in control. You may have another meaning for the word squire. It may be an interesting bit of knowledge to think about squire as we speak about squire horses and what being in control of any animal means. "To be squired around" is a phrase meaning to be taken here and there. Normally because of your class system on Earth, being squired around was reserved for the elite. Kings, Queens, Dukes, Earls, Duchesses all were squired by horses. All one has to do is look at the Royal Family of London to see how important the pomp and ceremony of being squired by the purest of the pure breed horses is, to gain insight into what I am beginning to share.

Certainly, long before the Monarchy was in existence other cultures found that if they were lifted up off the ground in carriages, that the message it was sending was "I am in control"; hence, my definition of the word squire. It is not a word that needs to be reframed or refreshed necessarily, unless any word conjures up superiority in an age of equality. We are spiritually entering in and continuing to work on this one main theme of equality, and it cannot come to pass on your Earth without also tying in the animal kingdom. Much wealth was obtained by using horses. Much wealth was also lost as a result. Seldom throughout your world's history will you find examples of a non purebred horse being referred to as a squire.

The topic of purebred and the idea that certain animals are thought of as prized possessions to elevate in some way mankind's superiority over others I must at least briefly address. Whenever there has been (or still exists) the perception that possessing any animal changes one's status, something remains out of balance and harmony and is an example of living in a 3rd or 4th dimensional reality—not a 5th dimensional pure love one. Many times in your history a woman would be offered for marriage in exchange for animals—hogs, swine, horses, chickens, sheep. How far mankind as a species has come from when this was common in many lands. Many Native American chiefs and the chieftains in South America, Central America and lands even earlier that knew different names, were often valued by the number of equines they possessed. When your planet has evolved to living in total and unconditional 5th, 6th and 7th dimensional frequencies, all animals will be seen equally.

A tender moment with a special friend

One would acknowledge that many animals give and have given humanity so much pleasure. Using horses for sport continues to give many souls pleasure. Jumping horses, dressage, schooling horses, these are a few means in which equines continue to elevate the human consciousness by elevating the mood of those around them. When things are out of balance, horses are used to hunt other animals. Horses which were used during battles in your world were so traumatized and neglected that this prayer request is also being suggested:

Let us pray or affirm:

“To all those equines used in battle on our Earth, we give our thanks for your service. We give our love to you and we make the intention that this will never occur again.” —Amen, Shalom, Namaste

For those who wish to become more involved in energy work to help Mother Earth and remove the stains of war, loss of human life, animal life that still remain energetically in the most heinous areas, you are encouraged to go to the war torn lands and stand on the soil and recite the prayer. Others may choose to toss rainbow healing energy to the lands where equines are still being slaughtered. We must speak of killing horses for human consumption at this time.

There is enough plant life on your Earth with more species being discovered for human consumption to feed your planet. Crops that are not GMO modified, crops grown without pesticides will continue to expand over the next 15 years at a very fast pace to help move humanity from a meat based diet to an exclusive safe, plant based one.

If we are to change the attitude of the majority of souls on Earth, your world would be and your own personal vibrations would be higher. To what purpose does having a higher vibrational body speak? It speaks to the truth that the higher the vibration, the closer to God, Supreme Creator, Allah, Infinite Mind.

Simply stated: The importing and exporting equines for human consumption must end. When the animal kingdom is elevated, then you can say that your world has ascended into pure love. Until then, it cannot be stated. In the meantime, giving grace over every meal that involves equine meat or any other meat source will help transmute the frequency. For those of you who may be looking for specific places to send healing energy for this cause, I would ask you to set your intention in the following places: China, Japan, Indonesia, and the Polynesian islands, Germany, France, Italy, Canada, Belgium, Mongolia and Poland.

I would like to end our sharing of equines with mentioning some of the greatest equines, and lead us through a healing visualization. Many fond memories from childhood of horses can be visualized by your mind at any time as a tool to soothe yourselves. Many of you may never have personal experiences with any equine, but may have been introduced to them in childhood through stories, storybook images and songs involving horses. Imagining the sight of a herd of horses galloping across a prairie or running free along the beach can instantaneously put some of you at peace. You may choose to close your eyes and create this image in your minds. The idea of running free is a tool many psychologists use in therapy. Take some time to think about the idea of freedom symbolized by the wild horse, and then note your feelings.

If there are some thoughts which arise about feeling constricted, note them, and allow the spirit of the equine to help you see the importance of the spirit of freedom. Jot down any aspects of your life which you may feel some resistance to—perhaps it is finding a new job, moving to a new location, accepting an idea that rests outside of your own. Whatever it is, be open to asking the equine(s) in your visualization to help you remove any resistance in your life to that of freedom and movement. Energy needs freedom of movement to manifest.

There are literally thousands of miraculous events in your world that equines of all types have created or co-contributed to. I will list some here:

- Did you know that it was an equine that allowed Madame Curie to discover the vaccine for polio?
- Did you realize that many of the first generators built on your planet required equines to power them?
- Did you know that Sir Galahad's favorite steed was so strong that his strength led to the creation of one of the first society's set up for the appreciation of the equine? In fact, it was viewed in those days as a royal society.
- Are you aware that when the earliest of equines roamed wild during the Paleolithic time on your Earth, and they were able to survive for days without food and water, much like camels of today?
- Are you aware that many bird species were able to grow in numbers because of their interdependence upon the equine family?

- Are you aware that many of you have animal totems that are horses?
- Are you aware that the very first equines on your planet were not very fast at all?
- Are you aware that equines hold grounding energy in their bodies which is universally important in anchoring these frequencies?
- Are you aware that herds of wild mustangs continue to serve a very useful purpose on your planet by allowing the energetic frequency of freedom to circulate in the “air” around them, which then spreads outward like an energetic ripple?
- Are you aware that equines (and other species) are able to determine when danger is near and show very obvious signs when one is observant?
- Are you aware that many skirmishes in your world were not won or ended by military might or strategy; they ended or were mercifully shortened because of the intelligent actions of equines?

Cats

Because of the immense popularity of the many different species which approaches 70, I have decided to include cats in our discussion of domestic land animals as popular pets, and I am also choosing to include them as a species in dire need of help and protection. As stated previously, it is not my intent to go over the gestation period of any species which may be easily found through other means, but to support love by spreading awareness and understanding.

We're purr-fect companions!

Early History

Defining when the first cats came into existence on your planet is a bit tricky even for me, because the cat you know today as the common house cat was not the cat first introduced during the moment of Creation. The very first cat-type creatures existed as long as 45-50 million years ago, and were primarily tree dwelling and resembled a small monkey more than the cat you can call your pet today. It is commonly considered that the first domesticated cats were brought to Europe in cargo ships. Can you imagine the harrowing trip that must have been like for those felines? Early transportation of animals across seas cost many animals their lives.

Among some of the earliest civilizations was the making of a cat's eye gem or ring. This was done with a very simple chiseling tool normally from a rock indigenous to the area. Those known to be wearing the rings (some were nose rings) were believed to carry magical powers. Mystics of all ancient lands realized early on that cats represented special energy. Egyptians viewed cats as sacred, and were known to have shaved their eyebrows in mourning when the family cat died. In other ancient civilization cats were so prized they rode at the head of processions celebrating Kings and Queens. In other places of your world, women like Cleopatra and Queen Nefertiti styled their eye makeup after the image of a cat's eye. Cats and cat people from other dimensions visited the earliest of your civilizations. Markings on cave walls reflect early man's interest in 7 feet tall catlike humans. They had a catlike head, with the body of a human. These catlike beings have been seen for generations in visions by those who are the medicine men and the mystics of your world.

Q: How long did the oldest known domesticated cat live to be?

A: I am aware of a feline who lived to be 41. He came home (made his transition) in the 1960's.

Next, we will examine several cat myths of more current times.

Myth #1. Cats are un-trainable.

Myth #2. Black cats bring bad luck.

Myth #3. Cats are meant to live outside.

Myth #1. Adult cats and kittens of all varieties and types are easily trainable when they like all animals are approached with a loving attitude. Scolding is not appropriate for any living being as it induces shame, which can lead to unworthiness. Cats respond especially well to repetition, as they are wired to process, accept, and then act.

♥ A harmonic healing code to help cats in the Western Hemisphere including North and South America, their islands, and the surrounding waters is 88899255. ♥ An energetic harmonic healing code to help cats in your Eastern Hemisphere including Asia, Africa, Australia, and Europe is: 770 770 1123456.

Myth #2. Black cats bring bad luck. You may be surprised at what follows, but my intention again is to bring understanding and expanded compassion to every living creature on your planet. Not only is there no truth to the idea, but black cats actually bring good luck! How is that for the reversal of a paradigm? Let's try together thinking or saying out loud, "Yellow cats bring good luck, orange tri-tone cats bring good luck, white cats bring good luck, and black cats bring good luck." Even if one person has thought and or stated these statements out loud, we have started to shift a superstitious belief long held by many. By nature, your animal kingdom has been associated with many beliefs over time. Another early myth surrounding cats which originated near 1100 A.D. was that when a human being was ready to leave this plane of existence they would be visited in spirit form by a cat.

Myth #3. Cats are meant to live outside. While many farmers and others may disagree with me, cats prefer living inside in the comfort and care of your homes, and their life spans substantiate this. In the wild, feral cats have the shortest lifespan of all, with about 2 years being the global average. How do I know this? They tell me as a collective. This, however, was not always so. Until the advent of the 20th century, many animals preferred roaming the lands unbridled.

Q: I am an energy healer and animal lover and concerned about what I see in my own country. What can we do to help feral cats and dogs all over the world, but especially in Southern Africa and parts of India? There are hundreds roaming wild and uncared for.

A: It is of vital importance to speak of this issue in the advancement of your planet and the animal species. While our focus here is on cats and other domesticated land animals, the same concerns may be noted for other animals. Since you mentioned your interest in energy, you may certainly use healing gems and stones to help rebalance the collective energy fields, even if the roaming cats and dogs do not frequent the same area day after day. They are making imprints themselves by leaving scent, energetically leaving trace residue and the like. God Mind is creating newer younger species to help offset this problem on your planet, by allowing higher vibrational cats and dogs to surround regions on your planet. Think of it this way, please: You have a garden infested with weeds. Do you destroy the weeds? Or do you, instead, look for harmless ways to soften the effects the weeds have on the garden?

Overpopulation because of mankind's insensitivities still remains a huge problem, which is being softened by younger animals with higher energetic strands of DNA.

Depending, as this is somewhat of a global statement, but depending upon where the neglected strays are, even if they never come in contact with a higher vibrational cat or dog, if the 5th dimensional dog or cat has walked that same soil, or been within 20 feet of the soil where the ferals have roamed, some healing will be imparted from this alone. You do have unseen helpers – this is my point.

Feral cats are domestic cats that were born in or have reverted to a wild state. They are unfamiliar with and wary of humans and roam freely in urban and rural areas. The numbers of feral cats is not known, but estimates of the U.S. feral population range from 25 to 60 million. Famous feral cat colonies are found in Rome around the Coliseum, with cats at some of these sites being fed and given medical attention by volunteers. One common approach to reducing the feral cat population is termed 'trap-neuter-return', where the cats are trapped, neutered, immunized against rabies and the feline leukemia virus, and then released. Before releasing them back into their feral colonies, the attending veterinarian often nips the tip off one ear to mark it as neutered and inoculated, since these cats may be trapped again. Volunteers continue to feed and give care to these cats throughout their lives. Given this support, their life spans are increased, and behavior and nuisance problems caused by competition for food are reduced. Source: Wikipedia

More will be shared on the topic of volunteerism, overpopulation in my final thoughts. For now, know that every prayer, every Earth action taken with an optimistic spirit rather than a defeated one will make an imprint.

Awareness is the first step to solve any problem. Continue to look for ways to eradicate fear of gangs of stray or feral dogs and cats, and remain hopeful.

Before concluding this chapter on domesticated land animals, kindly know that I would also like to acknowledge the following breeds by name and by doing so, have strengthened their energetic heart connection from Source to you and to me: guinea pigs, bison, domestic camels, ferrets, fancy mice, rats, turkeys, silver foxes and hedgehogs. Can you say more?

The national bird of Angola, the red-crested Turaco

CHAPTER 5

Birds of Land and Air

Until very recently in your world's history, birds, especially birds of prey received very little attention. They were seen as practically invisible. This you may think of this a false statement or leaves you questioning because throughout time birds have been a source of fascination. However, until recently, birds of prey were not always looked upon with favor. I would like to begin our brief exploration of wild birds of land and air by examining the birds of prey. Birds of prey also known as raptors hunt and feed on other animals. They exist in every continent on your planet. By species name some are: the owl, the osprey, the eagle, the vulture, the buzzard, the falcon and kites.

I will begin with a story to test my theory of the birds of prey being largely invisible in early planet Earth when compared to a fluffy, pink canary or glorious and graceful swan or even a partridge, and end our time speaking of the great role they serve in anchoring the Christ grid of Ascension, by calling them “marks” and explaining this later. Even today, if I appeared in etheric form and asked the man on the street (imagine my friends, me with a microphone as your man on the street interview) and I asked the average person what their favorite bird was, I would hear in this order, though the order has changed over time:

- ♥ Swan
- ♥ Oriel
- ♥ Parakeet
- ♥ Pelican
- ♥ Eagle
- ♥ Dove
- ♥ Bluebird

By contrast, if I were to share what the global consciousness told us in the early 1700’s, the list of favorite birds would have been:

- ♥ Hawk
- ♥ Dove
- ♥ Pigeon
- ♥ Pheasant
- ♥ Quail

If I were to share the similar concept from gathering the collective consciousness of mankind from the 1200's, I would have received:

- ♥ Dove
- ♥ Sparrow
- ♥ Chicken

As you can see with these few examples, mankind has had variable thoughts about bird life in your world. This is neither good nor bad, just a statement. Honoring all life is what I am attempting to induce in our teaching here. The invisibility concept simply implies valuability. However, largely throughout time, throughout all cultures the hawk and the owl have been in energy categories among themselves. Why is this so? Because of the mystery and superstition that surrounded them almost upon inception on Earth. The earliest cavemen were enraptured—hence, the name, raptor—by owls especially. Many of you know that many early civilizations on Earth honored and respected owls and eagles. Along with this honoring, however, came a lot of fear and misunderstanding at times. Certain cultures were very superstitious about seeing an owl before a full moon as sign of impending death. Other early cultures thought any owl to be a sign of witchcraft. Many souls were hanged or burned at the stake for believing in witches, and much of the time any owl was also tortured similarly. In the lowest of frequencies on your planet, both mankind and owls were believed to possess demons with the most awful atrocities placed upon them.

Owl hunting was a sport during a large portion of your Earth's development while Mother Earth was in her 4th dimensional energetic state. It wasn't until much later around the 15th century that owls were seen as signs of good luck. To this day, they still present an air of mystery. Perhaps it has to do with the fact that most can swivel their heads in almost a complete circle which may grant them an eerie persona. This, however, is a paradigm which I am trying to change.

A group of owls is called a parliament.

Before we leave the owl I must share some other examples. Did you know, dear souls, that at one time on Earth there was such a thing as owl soup and it was praised as bringing spiritual enlightenment? Many indigenous tribes continue to know of this as their cultural heritage or tradition, though with the dwindling of indigenous peoples there is also the dwindling of owl soup. In Antarctica, the early Eskimos would bait the owl with calling to it. Calling to animals to entrap them is ancient. However, the call they used was not the sound of an owl at all. It was/is in some places still, the call of a coyote. Calling the coyote in will bring in the owls. It is difficult at times to honor traditions of all of mankind when it comes at the "expense" of the animal kingdom.

However, make it known that the animal kingdom is God as each of you are, and many of them made a covenant written with their soul charts upon entering to be a source of food for humanity. What a great sacrifice that agreement was, friends!

During the late 12th century owls in England, Egypt and Eurasia, the host of many ancient civilizations, were prized for many things including their talons. Men of many cultures prized the talons of many different species of owls (as well as other birds of prey) as having powers to enhance their virility and longevity and suggested overall strength. This is not unlike the shark tooth or the tiger tooth still adorning some souls in your world today. Earlier still, cave paintings show man's fascination and the mystery birds in flight. Mankind as a species looked up to the skies and noticed birds of the air and skies before they noticed the animals at their feet. This is Gospel. The very first known citing of a winged creature was a cross between a four-legged dinosaur and a Pterodactyl Dinosaur from millions of years ago. Many cultures going back as far as pre-Greek and Roman stood mesmerized about the "winged Gods" who flew overhead. Many times celebrations folded. Many times civilizations would call upon the "Bird Gods," to oversee a hunt, or to protect them from evil. The belief that birds, bird feathers and flight are supernatural have a very long history on your planet, indeed.

Pterodactylus

Beaks, feathers, talons, have all been souvenirs of man's fascination with owls as part of ceremonies both in and out of the light. Therefore, the collective essence of owls in the spiritual realm is tolerance, for they have tolerated much.

The expression ‘wise as an owl,’ originated in the late 1800’s in the hamlets of Northern England and Ireland, and then spread to other regions. Owls are, in fact, very wise. They are considered sentinels from other universes. They have a high proportion of crystalline energies in their DNA structure which has been increasing over the hundreds of years since their creation. Today, if one were to witness a beautiful snowy owl, for example, know that it would be totally crystalline in nature and here to be a vehicle for transformation. Certain owls birthed in the last 20 years have also been embedded with a totally pure blue Christed light of God consciousness under their wings. (Different species have this same magnified DNA encoded in other parts of their bodies.) When they expand their wings, whether for preening or flight, they are spreading healing energy. In fact, many owls are put into place by God consciousness to maintain the phi ratio.

The phi ratio I am speaking of is that everything is divisible by itself. What does that mean and why does it belong in a book about animals? It means that this phi ratio is also known as the Golden Means. The Golden Means is a complex matrix of sacred geometry. Sacred geometry, for those unacquainted, is a system based in nature by Mother Earth, for everything on Mother Earth, and it connects everything on Mother Earth to the entire solar system. Very simply, with the other birds of prey and the owl species they form a pattern of geometric (energetic) vibrational shapes by their flight patterns and nesting habits. You may think that flight patterns of birds and nesting habits are totally random, or dictated by climate and various ecosystems, but it is more intricate than that...more divinely orchestrated than that by who else? The Infinite One. Om Mani Padme Hum.

Eagles

Let us move now to a sharing of another bird of prey, the eagle. What is the first word that comes to mind with hearing the word eagle? Is it majestic, powerful, graceful; imply leadership, or all of these impressions? Perhaps endangered also comes to your mind? Much like the owl has been a source of inspiration, mystery, and ceremony, so has the eagle as specie. Perhaps no other bird exemplifies this as much as the Bald Eagle. One has only look at currency and see the emblematic bird as a symbol of strength and patriotic power. So much so, that many have mocked the symbol.

As much as owls are marks that carry extraterrestrial codes as briefly mentioned, so do the eagles that soar in your skies. No eagle perhaps is more inspirational than the Bald Eagle. An eagle's eyes are up to eight times sharper than that of humans and contain many more color-sensitive cones. Perhaps you have heard of the expression, "He's an old eagle eye?" Well, much like other references to the animal kingdom, this was a basis in truth. The average eagle has eyesight far superior than that of humans. I suppose many of you are aware of this. But did you also know that this is achieved through God's Infinite Creation by layering different color-sensitive cone type structures within the eye itself? The intricacy of this layering itself is one of great mystery and worthy of examining further. If I were to ask anyone of you how far you can see, the furthest unaided might be between 20 and 30 meters, depending. Let's say, that with ideal conditions, the average human can see up to 30 meters. By contract, most species of eagles can see 5 times as far if not farther...and not only is their distant sight much greater than mankind's, so is how their eyes are composed.

The simplest way to describe this is to image a salt and pepper shaker. Visualize the eagle's eye as the salt shaker and the human eye as the pepper shaker. Does what I am attempting to say make any sense? The ocular cones within an eagle's eyes are larger than the human eye (similar to my salt and pepper simile) giving them more depth of vision besides simply distance. This means that with fair conditions most eagles cannot only locate a mouse in a field from a far distance, but that they can also see with greater depth. It is the equivalent to a human wearing "3D" glasses all of the time. This has enabled the species to thrive.

This magnified vision also has allowed all types of eagles to project energy from them. This again is largely because of the cone structure within them. Eagles by nature are regarded as Spirit Birds in a similar fashion as owls, but this too was not always truth. For the first half of your civilization globally, many species of eagles were thought to be vermin—birds to eliminate by destroying them one at a time or by destroying entire groups of them with this intent. The brown eagle and the spotted eagle suffered the most. They were hunted to near extinction for the sheer dislike of them. Many early ranchers, homesteaders, pioneers of many continents grew to despise the birds as they were misunderstood. Many believed that the eagle was a sign of bad luck. Many other cultures believed eagles to be pests that would scare off livestock.

Vultures and the Buzzards

Q: How can we help preserve the vultures and buzzards of our planet?

A: As we examine some other raptors it is with a heavy heart that I share the following: I personally escorted one million vultures and buzzards to the Kingdom of Light during my time as overseers of the animals of flight. I was assigned this job by my many masters in the earliest part of the 20th century. It is during this time that I was astounded by the large numbers of these raptors that were dying and in need of a light transport. I asked myself, "Why is this happening?", and then I heard a master say, "Because, angel, mankind fears them." I never question a master, yet I was still a bit alarmed by the magnitude of vultures and buzzards in a very short period on Earth. The years exactly were 1915 to 1989.

You, see, even I do not know and understand all that goes on at times. There are many instances where I have been the last to know, and I honor this with all my divine being.

To continue, I asked, "Master, why is this happening?", and my Master replied, "Fear caused the animal's immune systems to break down or decay." Many literally had their insides spoiling with rotting flesh because they were poisoned, electrocuted, engaged and examined by science, by those outside of the light and by the rest of mankind who harbored this gross misunderstanding of these two particular raptor species. You may be asking yourselves how an angel escorts one million anything into the Kingdom of Light; and it is, at times, a difficult task. You may say, “Angels can do anything!” to which I reply, “Yes, within reason.” You see, the animal kingdom by and large is a family, and families by nature do not like to be separated. Many of the birds that needed to be transported to the other side simply waited. Yes, their souls waited—in some cases a matter of Earth days, until I could escort all of them at once. This is the beauty in this.

In addition, many buzzards and vultures died as a result of poisons that they ingested that the human population created through war, radioactivity, lead, mercury poisoning, mercurochrome, and many other toxic substances used in the creation of war caused the demise of so many birds at one time.

As long as I am sharing this message, does everyone know where animals go when they leave the Earth plane of existence? You may be asking if they go to the same “heaven” as humans, and the answer is yes, they do. Not only do beloved pets like dogs and cats make their transfer into light, but so do ants, elephants, manta rays, robins and the tiniest of the Supreme Creator’s creations, the nematode and every wondrous creation in between.

I have a suggestion for humanity: if certain animal words conjure up unpleasant feelings within you, why don’t you change their names until you can elevate your heart? Vultures could become ‘lazzers’ and buzzards could become ‘pufftons’. What do you think? The next time someone says, “He is an old buzzard,” reply, “No, rather he is a puffton.” Changing perceptions of animals, not just birds, is easier than one may think. Redirecting preconceived ideas of them can be as easy as creating playful new names for the species as you know. Try it with your children. Their eager playful minds will easily come with new names for animal names they may fear.

Speaking further about animal species names, have you wondered friends, who does all the naming of the species?

How and who created the classification system of birds, for example?

Well, the answer may surprise you. The naming and classification of species did not, I say, come from a group of scientists or those with scientific minds. The naming originated from many different sources, but most certainly not the scientific community at large. The very first naming and categorization of some of the most feared and hated animals came from sources outside of the light to help keep the animal population down, just like their attempts to manipulate and keep the human population down and depressed, separated from love. Again I restate, Allah, Supreme Creator, did not choose to separate and categorize the animal kingdom at all. In the very earliest times on your planet all life was known in my world as simply supreme. That is how we would refer to life on your planet—supreme. No matter what size, how many legs, with feathers, with no feathers. You see, dark forces waged a battle and manipulated the DNA structure of the animal kingdom as they did with the human DNA and with that created animals to be fierce and aggressive.

There was a brief time on your planet where all lived in harmony and there was no need for predator and prey. Looking into the future the same will hold true again! Huge waves of energy continue to come to your planet to elevate and shift the consciousness and DNA restructuring. Am I implying that in the not so distant future will there be no predatory animals? Yes, this is what I am asking you to consider. When this occurs, there will not be a massive extinction of the animal kingdom. Quite the contrary, more and more species will live in love.

Perhaps you are saying to yourselves, this simply cannot be so. To which I kindly reply, wait and see.

♥ The healing harmonic code for the collective consciousness of buzzards for those who wish to work with alchemy is: 9913279 9913279.

Q: Is it correct to assume that we experience life in every type of animal life form (micro-organic, insects, fish, birds, reptiles, mammals, etc.)?

A: Yes, this is a very interesting question and one which I expect may be met with resistance. From my divine guide post, every soul spark is contained in everything. Give that a moment to sink in. Please allow me to restate, every soul spark is contained in everything. To help you understand this idea, the soul spark of a viper snake is the same soul spark of a blade of grass; the same soul spark of a robin is the same soul spark of a young boy, or girl. The concept of evolution, which I do not intent to fully explore in this book of animals is one of mystery, confusion, some inaccuracies and divinity all wrapped together.

In the simplest terms, man, woman, child, dog, cat, guinea pig, koala bear, tiger all are birthed at once. The soul spark can be thought of as atoms that are infinite in number and characteristics or disposition. In that sense, no arrangement of atoms is ever exactly the same. This is what leads to diversity of all of creation. So, I suppose we are speaking in terms of sharing the following: If a soul of any species has chosen to experience life in other body forms, then they are allowed to do so. Some will find these words as blasphemy I am sure. My intention as always is not to incite, but to calm and educate and dispel myth.

Another way to respond to this question is to share that a cat soul spark in one Earthly incarnation can choose to reincarnate within the same soul family again and again; or the cat may choose to reenter life on Earth as a human being, if they so desire. Human beings, by the way, are not at the top of any hierarchy of creation, if my example is leading your mind to think this. There is no hierarchy of creation—only creation itself—a human being can choose to reincarnate as an earthworm, if they so desire. However, this is very rare, indeed. But I have known it to happen. Most souls like to either reincarnate fully or partially within the same body type. Perhaps, a lengthier sharing of reincarnation will be determined at some point in time.

Early Italian symbol of peace

Doves & Pigeons

Doves and carrier pigeons have been a part of your culture in many regions on Earth. Many souls traditionally think of white doves as messengers of peace. Doves have appeared as symbols in many different religions. Doves have been rendered by many great artists throughout time. Many of you know the most common dove, a mourning dove, have used the term, ‘love-dovey,’ or heard their unmistakable —‘coo-cooing’ tone. They mate for life and are some of God’s gentlest creatures. The range of doves has increased over the last 15-35 years, though they are not considered to be overpopulated at this time on your planet. Hunting doves for sport has presented a heart dilemma generation after generation, as does hunting any animal for sport. Pigeons were once in your history considered a delicacy and were the main meal of many a feast.

Beginning with the Egyptians, the dove was a symbol of quiet innocence. The Chinese felt the dove was a symbol of peace and long life. To early Greeks and Romans, doves represented love and devotion, and care for a family. The dove was the sacred animal of Aphrodite and Venus, the goddesses of love and friendship. Source: Wikipedia

Do you know that there are doves which are bright blue, bright red, lemon yellow, peach colored and amber colored, in addition to the most commonly known white dove of peace? Energetically, call upon the dove when you need more peace in your life. Any dove will do. They know their purpose no matter what their coloration. Bright blue doves resonate on the frequency of sapphire ray light; bright red doves resonate on the frequency of peace among families; lemon yellow colored doves resonate on the frequency of peace among the young. Just as angels have different colored wings to identify us with different phylum, so do doves. If one wishes to call upon a particular colored dove for a particular aspect of peace that is possible. Creation is infinite in its wisdom! Below you'll see a partial listing of the names of the birds by family to witness more infinite creation:

♥ Auks ♥ Bitterns and Herons ♥ Boobies and Gannets ♥

Buntings ♥ Chats and Thrushes ♥ Cormorants and Shags

♥ Cranes ♥ Crows ♥ Cuckoos ♥ Dippers ♥ Finches ♥

Flycatchers ♥ Grebes ♥ Gulls ♥ Hoopoe ♥ Ibises ♥

♥ Larks

Nightjars ♥ Orioles ♥ Owls

♥ Oystercatchers

♥ Petrels and Shearwaters ♥ Pipits and Wagtails ♥

Plovers and Lapwings ♥ Sandpipers and Allies ♥

Shrikes ♥ Skuas ♥ Stilts and Avocets ♥ Stone-curlews

♥ Swifts ♥ Tree Creeper ♥

Waxwings ♥

Wrynecks and Woodpeckers

One may normally think of pigeons when thinking of doves, as they have many similarities both visually and with the tone they make. Homing pigeons were of great value (if one can state that war has value) in bringing many wars to an end quicker than if they had not been used.

French military, German military, British Military especially relied on messages being served to those in service to get strategic messages, including where to find hidden food provisions to troops. Going back to even earlier times, to the feudal or Middle Ages, homing pigeons were often sent to scout in place of humans. The training of the homing pigeons and the other species used in this work is quite amazing as I see it, though the birds made it seem extremely easy.

During the Middle Ages, pigeons were used in Transylvania, Albania, Yugoslavia, Saudi Arabia, Egypt, and the Syrian region to relay all sorts of information which had been written onto papyrus or leather or other cloth and secured to the bird. This was done to avoid various plagues and infections that scoured the Earth during these times. Interestingly enough, very few birds perished as a result of carrying information into leper colonies, many survived the bubonic plague, also known as Black Death, and other infectious diseases of the times when souls entering these encampments were infected. One may infer that the birds were not in the regions of sickness long enough to become carriers and spreaders of disease, and this is a fair thought.

For, indeed, many hundreds of pigeons were trained with calls along with food rewards to land long enough for the message to be untied from their leg, read and—if a message was to go back with the pigeon—land long enough for the reply to be reattached. Training itself was a long, laborious process for some; other handlers knew the wisdom of the pigeon they were working with and came to know the exact bird or birds out of hundreds as the bird known as theirs. Additionally, the pigeons themselves knew which area and which person (in most cases) to deliver the message.

Trial and error, repetition and reward were the tools used for this elaborate training of cooperation between man and bird. One more point before moving on from pigeons. Many of them were able to deliver and find their destination point without any reward—simply by relying on their sonar. Their sonar allowed some of the birds to seek a target up to hundreds of miles away. Many handlers had prized pigeons and asked to be buried in ceremony with them.

Q: I've read that animals use names to refer to one another in a similar way as we humans do. Is that so?

A: Yes, very much so! Many, but not all species of birds and other animals do refer to each other in a language that is similar to using names as humans use. The way and the reason many species do this is the speculation among many scientists. So much still has yet to be uncovered about the animal kingdom on your planet! There is an exhaustive search going on presently in South America by a group of businessmen turned philanthropists to study exactly this. Why and how do animals refer to each other? Does identifying a Savannah Sparrow or Harlequin Macaw help them know that bird, as the human mind is able to bring forth the image of a person with a name? And the answer is yes. Many do so by assigning a number or harmonic frequency to a fellow bird mate.

In this example, two birds meet by chance on a branch in the Amazonian Rainforest located in South America. One is a Toco Toucan and the other is a Ruby-throated Hummingbird. Neither one has seen or met each other before, even though birds of many species tend to migrate and return to the same regions and fly the same byways.

However, it is naive to think that every bird in a village or living in your own neighborhood has met one another previously. Not all are going to be nest mates or family groups. Some birds will, by nature, fly to investigate other areas. So, in order to “know” one another most typically, but not always, birds assign a frequency number to another bird they are meeting for the very first time. They do this automatically. In much the same way you know that you have to raise your arm to reach some object which sits up high, the signals are sent to the brain almost instantaneously for the birds to categorize the other bird and they categorize them normally, as I say, with a numeric harmonic frequency which identifies the bird as friend or foe. That is the only reason categorizing exists within species of this type—to help the animal instantaneously determine this.

Even a newly hatched bird is able to assign a numeric code or codes to help them get to know the bird species. You may say that the numeric code is the equivalent to names of people on your planet. It is very similar conceptually. However, for future species of birds and other animals this will be unnecessary, as all will be only friend as the pure love vibration will extend to you and through all.

Q: Can you share a story between man and doves for us so that we can witness the goodness of man and the bird kingdom?

A: There are thousands of examples that we have witnessed as special moments between mankind and doves, particularly. To this day, many earthly love birds are united in eternal matrimony with a plastic dove perched atop a wedding cake. I do not have to go back very far in your

Earthly time before seeing an event to share. As the story goes, in a land called Ethiopia in the year 1813 there was a family of villagers who turned their grasslands into a sanctuary for all birds. Of course, many individuals turn their farms and other lands into sanctuaries for the bird populous, but this particular family stands out in my mind because of their determination and perseverance. What did they determine? What did they perceive? This is what will we examine together.

If one knows anything about Ethiopia, one knows in your world that the climate can be inhospitable. It can be draught ridden with heat beyond what many souls can tolerate, insects can plague the country, and the collective consciousness throughout much of your Earthly time of Ethiopia has been one of survival—day to day survival.

This particular family that comes to mind had 8 children, living with only one parent, a father figure. Their mother was killed. The lives of the children largely were lives of desperation and in survival mode. Living in the Serengeti is a formidable task, even for those civilizations who have adapted to some of the harsher climates on your planet. Their survival was very much a day to day thing.

One day, one of the children, a boy of 13 noticed an unusual bird in a tree branch, one he had not seen before. The boy called to the bird by making the closest bird call he had been taught to make to call the regional birds to him, but to no avail. This bird did not return his call. Translating: “Son, if the bird does not return your call, leave it be,” the father said to his son. But this son did not obey. He went about the rest of his days as normal, preparing food, doing his chores, and when night fell he rose up out of his sleep and went to look for the unusual looking bird which he had seen during the day—the bird that had captured his imagination.

I myself whispered in the young boy's ear and said, "Try cooing." As I had not appeared to the boy previously, he nearly dropped over in fright, dropping his lance to the side of his body only to fall upon the ground. "Do not fear," I continued, "I am Archangel Michael, and I saw you fascinated by the dove in the tree earlier today. He is not there now, but I will ask him to return tomorrow for you to see again," and then I left. Startled, but smiling, the young boy walked back to his sleeping quarters and fell fast asleep dreaming of white birds he called "magic birds." Before dawn, he rose again and began running to the same tree, cooing and cooing and cooing out loud, calling to his new friend hoping he would appear. Once at the tree, he looked up yet saw nothing at first. His spirit sank. He tried again, "coo—coo," ... "coo—coo," ... "coo—coo" ... Then he waited, and he waited, and he waited until almost nightfall.

Just as he was ready to give up, the most beautiful, sparkling, white dove with a laurel wreath appeared again in the same tree and looked down at the boy. The bird looked like it glowed to the boy. The dove dropped the laurel piece from its beak and it drifted down into the hands of the young boy. As it touched his hand, his hand began to tingle and become warm, and the boy was overcome with a feeling of peace and joy and love. "How lucky I am," he thought! As he closed his hand to hold tightly onto the laurel piece, a tear ran down his face, and in one terrific, silent, graceful movement, the beautiful white sparkling dove that had brought so much happiness to the young boy, flapped its wings and flew off, never to return—at least not in physical form. After that, whenever the boy would wish to conjure up his magical bird friend again, he would visualize him in the same tree, hold onto the laurel piece and see him energetically appear any time and every time he “cooed.”

Rainforests as Sanctuaries of Bird Life

Undoubtedly, an entire text could be written about your world's rainforests and the outstanding forms of creation living in them. I will do my best to present a glimpse into an average day in a perhaps lesser recognized rainforest than the Amazonian one, the rainforest of Indonesia.

Spread over 18,000 islands, Indonesia contains the world's third largest area of rainforest after the Amazon and Africa's Congo Basin. With just 1 percent of the Earth's land area, Indonesia's rainforests contain 10 percent of the world's known plant species, 12 percent of mammal species - including endangered orangutans and critically endangered Sumatran tigers and rhinos - and 17 percent of all known bird species. Source: http://www.ran.org/indonesia_s_rainforests_biodiversity_and_endangered_species

It is a bit misleading to talk about a typical day in the Indonesian rainforest or any ecosystem because the wonder which exists even within systems that may be vanishing or temporarily languishing is nothing short of a miracle. Miracles occur when love is present. I intend to present some insight into this rainforest to demonstrate the miracles that occur daily all over your planet.

I will pretend for a moment that I am a bird living here. I am choosing to be the yellow-tailed black cockatoo. I awaken every day as if my internal alarm clock is set for 4 a.m. in the wee early morning hours. I am a male yellow-tailed black cockatoo and find it easy to mate among my species. I enjoy the biodiversity of food sources available to me. Today, I am going to feed upon nuts mainly, and am choosing to twill to my other bird friends to alert them of this and to see if they would like to fly with me in my search. I am choosing to fly as much as I can today, because it simply feels good to do so. I am aware that other bird species cannot fly and I consider myself very blessed with having been created with the anatomy to do so effortlessly. It's 5 o'clock in the wee early morning now, and I have already preened myself.

Preening is something that I also enjoy. Preening my feathers actually coats them with a waxy substance that allows them to appear fuller, for not only the purpose of being attractive to a female, but the waxy substance also gives greater flight. The waxy substance comes after I ingest a meal primarily of nuts, and perhaps some berries. It is not sticky whatsoever. It's also a ritual. Do you have rituals that you undertake? I will repeat this preening about five or six times before I rest.

I have found some other bird friends who are going to fly along with me across hundreds of miles in the next 5 or 6 days. I do have emotion, and I do have feeling, and I am aware also of pain. This news of others making this flight with me will increase our speed together, and it will allow us to draft off one another when the air currents shift. The air currents do shift quite a bit over water, more so than land. The purpose of this trip we plan to take is to repair damaged ecosystems by spreading some waste from which some new growth will occur. This is a small part of any journey. This is not folly! This is why many species were able to diversify themselves, through the actions of birds in flight...not just my species, but many. I see around me at midday that the bird population around me is generally nesting. I plan to nest, or rest, later in the day. The birds that surround me here find midday the best time to roost, or nest or rest. If you could see through my eyes, you would see six hundred different colors. You would also know that heat from the forest itself is an incubator of life. When the Earth's temperature varies by even one degree, we all feel the difference. We all realize that stabilization of climate is of utmost concern by many in the human community.

We birds do have telepathic type communication similar to human beings. I may choose to intercept human thought consciousness, but most of the time I enjoy reveling in sound among my family of birds. Later in the day, near nightfall, much of the rainforest comes alive. We seek to be sheltered by the winds of change of climate by repairing energy grids through our flight patterns. We, here, can also repair energy grids which affect climate by mating. Mating is done not only to fulfill the species, but also done to anchor certain vibrations through birthing others. This may sound very foreign to some of you, but it is as I see it. The domain we occupy presently is one where the rainforest here is in need to continual repair and restoration.

We, the birds here, also do this through telecommunication as sound. So much of my existence is sound related that I use sound throughout each and every day as many of God's creatures do. On any given day in this forest, I can discern 25 different bird calls or communications. Sometimes, it does get rather noisy here and more difficult to understand what the other birds are trying to say to one another. A pure warbler tone, for example here, generally means “I am happy and well.” A pure staccato tone, that varies in the sound scale widely, generally indicates that there may be some cause for alarm. However, some bird species here are anxious by nature, when truly there is not much indeed to be alarmed about. We, the birds in the Indonesian Rainforest, have received messages from Source that assure us that all will be well and thriving now in this time you are referring to as the New Earth Awakening.

In addition, I have been told that I am going to play a role in harmonizing the crystalline frequencies by dropping droppings into the soil. This may not seem very appealing to some of you unless you see life as I do—yes, I have a consciousness and I do have some ability to emote. Ask anyone who has watched two birds go through a mating ritual and you will agree that animals, birds, do have the ability to discern. There have been those since creation who placed the concept in mankind’s mind that animals are not capable of much—including feeling or advancing a thought. This is simply untrue, as I plan to spend this evening in the forest projecting calls into the night to say, “Hello, I am fine and all is well.”

Intelligence Among Birds

I am often asked which animals are the smartest. Where do birds rank? I would like to examine the intelligence factor as a sequence of events. Yes, there are some species of animals which are more intelligent than others. (This may defy science). Yes, there are some bird species which are considered more intelligent than others, as well, though defining intelligence is what I'd like to examine next. Much like humans, there are multiple ways to gauge intelligence—ingenuity, resourcefulness, playfulness—of animals. Some will argue with me and say that in order for animals to exhibit different levels of intelligence that all species must continue to evolve far past from where they are now. However, there are many of you who have witnessed the intellect of many animals. If I said that a hummingbird is one of the most intelligent birds on your planet, would you believe this? In fact, they are. All varieties and sub species of hummingbirds as a collective group rank way at the top of a scale of intelligence, based upon their ability to find nectar in the most unusual places (I am not speaking of back yard feeders here.)

I am speaking of wild hummingbirds. I would like to devote further sharing about hummingbirds at this time.

Hummingbirds are the smallest birds on the planet

Anyone who has ever seen a live hummingbird will likely never forget it. Their incredibly small size, their tiny beating wings and speed at which they dart about makes them a bird favorite. They do have the capability of speed of light action. That is not a mistake! They were originally designed by Source to have the full encoded DNA the equivalent to the speed of light within them. Many species of birds were tampered with by dark forces to limit them, just as with humankind. The hummingbird was also a bird species, as I see it that had energetic implants to limit them in some manner. With this being said, however, since 2012 no new hummingbirds, no new any animal species will have further energetic implants within their gene coding! Hallelujah!

Hummingbirds are found only in the Western Hemisphere, from southeastern Alaska to southern Chile, although most live in the tropics. There are more than 300 species of hummingbirds, 12 of which summer in North America and winter in tropical areas. Source: Wikipedia

As it is, they can fly in figure 8's and do so frequently. When they move into this pattern as everything is energy, they are solidifying infinite grace to your planet. How do they know how to do this? Through Source. They can also spin in loops, turn upside in flight, and fly forward, backward, left, right and all things in between. No other bird species can claim these abilities. As a species, they are beloved by many who nurture them and enjoy seeing them visit their feeders. Some naturalists and observers go to great lengths to attract the hummingbird to their door—such as, coloring water to appear like ruby red or neon orange, or planting specific species of flowers and trees, shrubs and vines. It is not just the color, however, which attracts these miniature creatures, but the scent.

Unlike many other birds, hummingbirds are a cross between bees and birds. They behave in many ways with the intelligence of the bee kingdom. (Ask any bee keeper or ant keeper what the most intelligent forms of life are on your planet and you may find yourself in a hotly contested debate among the insect lovers of the world.) They have a very short life span and, as such, require a lot of tender loving care as a species.

Many have faced extinction only to be restored in numbers over your Earth's development. For example, during the Middle Ages and the Neolithic Era, if a person were to spy a hummingbird, they had formed the belief that death was nearby. There is scarcely an animal alive that has not had some superstitious belief (or still does) surrounding them. Speaking now to the intelligence of hummingbirds—they are seen in my realm as guardian angels are seen—as helpers.

They are in many spiritual ways the energetic equivalent to guardian angels, here to help other bird species. Many other bird species revere the hummingbird as a sacred bird. We have indicated that all life has intelligence, so with that understanding the idea that other bird species, mainly the much larger condors and such, find sacredness in their tiny companions of flight. What makes hummingbirds so intelligent? The answer lies in their hearts, or rather, their heartbeats. They defy not only the law of gravity about inertia, but they also expend very little energy in flight and in hovering. This is a learned skill, not one that every baby hummingbird instinctively knows how to do.

By all relative means, the heartbeat of the hummingbird in comparison to the workload or energy expended should be miles apart. Yet, in fact, it is exactly the way that the hummingbird regulates their heart beat per second which has caused much facilitation over the years. They control their own heartbeat! You may find this difficult to grasp, but not all animals are able (or willing) to control their heartbeat...but hummingbirds do.

The Swallows of San Juan Capistrano

Another intelligent bird species is the cliff swallow, primarily so because of their extensive flight paths and navigational skills needed to make these flights. I would like to examine next, the swallows of San Juan Capistrano. For those who may be unfamiliar with the miracle of the swallows of Capistrano which takes place each year at the Mission San Juan Capistrano, some background may be helpful first.

This particular mission has gained recognition for being home to thousands upon thousands of swallows which return there in March on or about St. Joseph's Day (though scouts arrive sooner). They have been doing this for centuries. The cliff swallows leave the mission during the month of October, though the scouts leave sooner, once again, as they do on every flight, sometimes in early September. Many bird species besides cliff swallows have "scouts" that fly in advance of a long migration such as this one to Argentina. The scouts are very useful indeed, as the name implies. How scouts are selected is quite an awe inspiring process, indeed, and reinforces the intelligence of the species.

The process for cliff swallows to determine which birds will become scouts and fly ahead to determine wind drifts and other atmospheric conditions is a bit complex and simple at the same time. How wondrous is that? Normally, early on in a young bird's life they show different strengths, just as human beings do—some young birds are stronger than others, some young birds are more curious by nature, some young birds are content with following others. Birds do have soul chords, or the rough equivalent in humans to personality traits. It doesn't take long for the elder birds or parents to take notice. This is the simple part of the process for choosing a scout. The more complex component of doing so involves the process of elimination. I would like to describe that now.

Let's imagine that we are the mother and father swallow, and our three young, newly hatched are showing the same soul chords—virtually the same traits—all are strong, all are large for their age, and all three like to have a commanding presence in the colony. This is partially recognized by the number of tonal ranges or number of songs they are able to produce. Many bird species do not learn by mimicking sound; they learn by the encoding within their intelligence by design from Source. Swallows can assign scouts on the number of songs they know because each song designates a flyway. Fabulous, yes!

I say, even if a young swallow, in this case of Capistrano, has never made the flight to winter in Argentina, they know the best routes through their intelligence. That's the rather complex yet fascinating aspect of cliff swallows and many species of birds. So, it's a coin toss! Birds as young as three weeks old have been selected as scouts to lead the colonies, which sometimes number into the thousands, during migration.

Let us return to the legend. As the story goes, the bird's clay nests were knocked down and the swallows viewed as pests until the day when the mission overseer proclaimed, “Let them come!” The miracles, as I see it, fall both inside of the bird colony/species itself, and also in outer world or outside expression. Allow me to explain. It is easier enough to make presumptions about all matter. To presume that all migrating bird species “know” what flyways to follow, like they are on autopilot, is a presumption of a huge proportion. By and large, many flocks of all type of flight birds miscalculate and end up either north, or south or east or west of their destination.

Some species as with the cliff swallows, as shared, have a higher knowing about safe travel, not just about what and how the airstream currents flow, but about conserving energy to make these long distant flights. Geese have similar hardwiring as chicks. These two species collectively account for over half of the air miles. Check your own frequent flier miles, friends, (chuckle) and you will find that you are sorrowfully lacking. Collectively, both species have logged about 9 million hours of travel time per calendar year. Allow me to repeat—

Cliff swallows and geese travel on average 9 plus million hours of flight time per calendar year.

This monstrous number demonstrates their determination as species, their fluidity or grace of flight and soul purpose. These two species embody the same soul theme or purpose, that being, “bearer of peace and harmony.” It is a similar soul theme to doves, yet different. Therefore, I believe that part of the miracle of the cliff swallows has been in their consistency of flight. As shared, many birds simply get lost. Perhaps this statement stirs another chuckle within you? Many birds, as you may know, cannot make long voyages of flight.

As the geese and swallows span the globe, migrating waves of energy are formed along with them. The migrating or movement energy that they are creating allows them to flow very easily by projecting the energy waves in front of them. Rather than drafting air flow, they extend energy in front of them in a similar way. You may envision that they create a vacuum, and within this vacuum they glide through the air. What wonder! What joy!

Migratory Pathways and Flight

To further enhance your understanding, migration pathways continually change, even though the Capistrano cliff swallows reappear every year near the same time and depart every year at the same time, they do not, as I see it, always take the same journey or pathway. Sometimes the scout birds relay to the colony that flying higher, lower, and circling or following a wavy pattern of flight is best. Not all birds fly in a straight line. This is another presumption that has perhaps formed. Many birds fly in tandem, two at a time, side by side. Can you name some? Some birds fly making large loops. Can you name some? Some bird species like to rise and fall and play in the soaring skies. Can you identify some of these birds?

Birds are some of the most misunderstood species as a whole. In many regions of your world they are also largely underappreciated. This is something we hope will collectively change in more and more souls of all ages, including further educating and inspiring young souls, the children of your planet. I would love to see further expansion of all arboretums, all bird sanctuaries, all backyard bird watching and feeding stations, so that more children delight in them. Rise up and unite in raising the collective frequency of all birds to that of man. This is my request. Other species by nature are elevated, comparatively speaking, in your present world. There is no reason why this intent will not come to pass in a matter of months and years. By the year 2018, half of the animal population will be wearing feathers.

Aviaries by nature do allow for the introduction of birds to individuals who may otherwise never come to know them. Some are better than others, of course, yet all confine the bird. Public aviaries exist in all major continents across your globe. I would like to see greater enforcement of the building structures themselves and the materials used. Some of the materials contain toxins. Stricter regulations each run by a loving, body or community should work to enforce to quality of life for all birds confined to any aviary.

♥ The energetic harmonic code to help heal birds in aviaries is: 99154321 (temporarily pausing in between each series.)

Tourism and Poaching

I am well aware that many on Earth abide by the laws and supply their families with food from the animal kingdom. I am also fully aware that millions and millions of birds are being illegally hunted for trophy sport, for their beaks, for their feathers, for their claws and talons, and for other body parts used in ceremony. I am also an advocate for limiting gun usage. For your understanding, every time a bird is shot while in flight, the energetic equivalent is that of the atomic bomb which was dropped on Hiroshima, Japan. We refer to it as energetic residue. The energetic residue appears as smoke, and depending upon the caliber of the gun and the number of shots fired, the toxic residue can continue to affect birds in flights for hundreds of miles. How does this occur? The sound of the report produces an echo, and the echo signals fear in every bird, in every animal. The fear response continues to expand among the flock or colony and, depending upon the size of the flock or colony, the fear residue can also create sickness and a susceptibility to disease by weakening the bird's immune systems.

Can you imagine the force of an atomic bomb?

Well, imagine and know that the animal kingdom is more sensitive than human beings. Not only does the report leave an energetic toxic residue that Mother Earth needs to try and dilute, but again, depending upon what region the firing is done, many natural flyways are chopped into little tiny pieces. Flyways are energetic chords much like crystalline grids which surround your Earth and other planets. Sometimes these unseen energetic pathways are referred to as ley lines. These ley lines or crystalline grids help support life on Earth. When they are disrupted in any number of means that fall outside of love and compassion, some type of dysfunction follows. Your world speaks of global warming, and I say unto you, largely global warming is a result of mankind disrupting the energetic ley lines which serve like the skeletons of your body.

When skeletons become weak, they crack and break and become brittle. Gun fire breaks or creates holes which then thin or break this fiber of interconnectedness. Mankind has no one to blame but himself for the global changes that have occurred over the last 150 years especially, and no one but man will fix this.

We do and have been sending legions of angels for centuries to work with those in the light to repair the balance of harmony on your planet within the animal kingdom, and will continue to do so. Everyone has Mother Earth to thank for not giving up and tossing her hands up in despair a long, long time ago. Lay down your guns and go hunting with a camera instead. Do you not think that your needs for abundance cannot be met without killing birds? We know that many earn income from hunting trips and leading other excursions. Do you not think that you cannot prosper in other ways? Have you lost your faith? Lay down your arms. It is also my desire that every child be educated to the atrocities that go on and encouraging compassion within the younger souls. Many of the younger souls have a greater respect for life than earlier generations, and have come here with the spiritual purpose to help them.

Egret is one of the migratory flocks targeted.

Penguins, Puffins and Other Flightless Birds

In the region then known as South Africa, a long, long, time ago many children in the tribe were curious about the birds they had heard of from the cold north. They asked the elders, “Please tell us about the birds we see in our visions that live in the cold. Why is this that they live there?” Seated around a night fire the elders of tribe would say, “Because Shar-Tonka created them.” (Their word for God.) They continued. “They have water proofed feathers to keep them warm in the cold. They are playful. They waddle back and forth, like some of your boats in a stormy sea. Their colors are like night and day.” To which one boy replied, “Give us what to call them,” to which the elder replied, “Call them “Knookée”— their word for penguin. Little did the boy in this story realize that there are many species of penguins, and some of them live in the temperate zones of the Southern Hemisphere. It was not uncommon for children in many civilizations to learn of animals from a very early age. Many were taught by tradition that they needed to know what bird brought what message to them in the form of their visions and prayers.

Many traditional beliefs stated that birds that did not fly were cast from Heaven and made to serve a dreary life. Many a young Ugandan boy or girl grew up thinking this for much of their life. Many tribes were frightened of the birds that did not fly. They did not fully understand them. Those who did revered them as all of life. One group of people who came to appreciate the penguin was the Inuit. Though inhabiting different hemispheres, the Inuit believed that penguins were vital in the stream of life between man and whale. Some would sing songs in celebration of the penguin, and play games acting as waddling birds and invoke them in vision quests.

Puffins are a fascinating bird. They can survive with very little food. They are cute beyond cute, they seemingly are almost always at peace, and they serve as a reminder that some of the best things in life, to term an expression on Earth, can be found in small packages. Their name implies lightness, exuberance, joy and celebration. The soul theme for puffins is just that—playful exuberance. As I was asked to name some of the most intelligent bird species, I will say that all forms of intelligence are measured in my Kingdom. The puffin's intelligence lies in their ingenuity. As a rose has many petals, so of course does defining intelligence. When it comes to defining intelligence in pure scientific terms, I doubt many of the scientific community will agree with me and place puffins near the top of the list. It matters little what list, if any, as we should work to see all creatures as gifts of God. It is every bit as important to listen to one's highest self. Does this make sense?

If I say unto you that puffins are ingenious creators in the way that they communicate and make their homes, yet you never come to know this first hand, have I accomplished much? It is my wish and desire as we continue to choose some shared words together, that each of you find inspiration in some bird, some land animal, some insect, some endangered species, and then take another step and another step and another until you find yourself running in a field of endless dreams and exalted interaction with all of the animal kingdom. Moving now from the nimble, colorful puffin, the next bird in our examination is the Emu, the second largest bird by height after the Ostrich.

Emu chicks have longitudinal stripes that provide camouflage.

In prehistoric times, the equivalent of the Emu was known as the Juranysaurus. The Juranysaurus stood 15 feet in height during the Paleozoic Era, and had few natural enemies because of its speed. Today you may find emus in lands where the climate suits them, which are naturally warm and accommodating ones such as what you will find in Australia, New Guinea, Indonesia and the Philippines. The soul theme of emus is treaty maker.

As a species this means that, throughout time, even from the earliest of times on your planet, they had a bluish-green aura. An aura is an energetic imprint much like a fingerprint which is unique to every living thing, although auras do change unlike fingerprints. The bluish-green aura of the emu emits a frequency of their soul theme, if this helps you understand how animals can share/spread their soul theme. It is not the only way, however. Since 2012, many of the younger animals coming to your planet have exceptionally high vibrational fields and a myriad of healing codes within the structure of their DNA now to help elevate the planet, in addition to having solid, fortified auric fields if the particular animal has not been tampered with or injured by man or other predators.

For example, many of the younger birds (and other species of animals) have light codes placed in various places in their light bodies. Some are sprinkled with gold and silver, the two highest healing elements on your planet, and some have fused golden energetic discs behind the folds of the eye which emit high healing frequency through their eyesight alone. This is not reserved purely for falcons or birds known to possess great sight, but many species determined by God to anchor pure love ascension on your planet.

Emu oil is used as a solvent to heal. Some claim it to be the most therapeutic and healing substances on the planet for skin, joint pain, rashes, wrinkles and more. I say, instead of formulating, producing and selling emu oil, capsules and the like, why not choose instead to spend time in the company of an emu? This is not hard, friends. Nothing is hard when there is a will. This is healing. Many plants contain the same ingredients as emu oil—the sprig of an olive branch, just one example, has as much healing properties contained in it as does slaughtering an emu to produce oil. Emu feathers are prized as well and have undergone resurgence in their popularity within the last 300 years.

Michael's Angelic Bird Facts

Before 2019, half of all the endangered bird species will be renewing themselves through a process called re-numeration. Re-numeration means that young birds 1, 2, 3 years of age presently will mature energetically, thus strengthening their genetic coding to help ensure their longevity.

- Do you know that birds need to mature energetically before their full abilities are established?
- Do you know that most birds carry disease resistant DNA molecules?
- Do you know that the world's awareness of the animal kingdom will continue to grow by leaps and bounds, literally, assisting to save thousands of bird species which may otherwise have become extinct in the next 10 years?
- Do you know that in addition to the known bird species on your planet there are another 3 dozen yet to be discovered in North America, approximately 5 dozens to yet be discovered in Latin America, and the same number to be discovered near the Aleutian Islands in the next 3 to 5 years?
- Do you know that in about the year 1920 islanders of the Galapagos Islands feared birds as much as they feared torrential rains?
- Do you know that every day another scientist or biologist, or ornithologist or anthropologist is held hostage against their will in an attempt to keep them from studying the animals?

- Do you know that in some countries 9,000 or so individuals every day bow and pray to bird Gods?
- Do you know that some species of birds bunk together with as many as 15 baby birds in the nest at the same time? Can you guess which species?
- Do you know that some species of birds can make over 100 different sounds? Can you identify them?

A Sykora bird doing the watching

Hippos sharing vibrational space

CHAPTER SIX

Wild Animals

By definition, wild animals are animals that have never been caged, never been tamed, never been under a microscope, never been impounded for scientific study or tagged. By this definition, there is less than 5% of the total animal population which accounts for this definition. If we choose to widen our examination of wild animals to include those who have been studied by scientists, then that percentage rises to 20%. Perhaps, this percentage is a telling statement in itself—that as long as there have been animals on your planet there have been those interested in their habits.

In a brief examination in a text such as this there are 5 main wild animal categories that I would like to share at this time. They are:

- ♥ Hyenas and Jackals
- ♥ Big cats, including Lions, Tigers, Jaguars and Leopards
- ♥ Elephants, Rhinoceroses, Hippos
- ♥ Monkey and Apes
- ♥ Wild Mustangs

I almost stated man, but find more hope and light in how man is respecting wild life than mankind did 100, 200 and 1000 years ago. Nevertheless, one cannot present a book of animals without speaking at length about the responsibility future generations plays in the saving of many species. Even this generation, if you are reading these words, have an obligation to honor wild life...all forms of life.

Let us move now to a time in the way distant past when man and animals lived in harmony—there was such a time on your planet. It was called the Paleozoic time. During this time, all animals were wild and there were no known threats except among each other. During this time, thousands and thousands of animals roamed freely about. In many ways it was a time of nirvana. However, at the same time, all this free roaming about lead at times, to chaos. Out of this chaos, order was born. It was born slowly, but nevertheless it was birthed by what scientists call evolution. I will call it God's plan.

It was here that animals began to naturally separate themselves into what are commonly known now as herds, or groups, or pods. During this process of natural selection (what science refers to), the earliest forms of the species I've listed for examination were distant cousins of the animal species you may see today.

This is because, through a process I am calling natural maturation, some wild animals simply ceased to be here. It was their choosing, no one else's. They did not fall prey to man or climate change. This resulted in another huge shift of vibration on your planet. This shift, where many early wild animals chose not to reincarnate and return, or choose to leave the plane of life here early, was referred to in my world as a planetary rift, and it was an energetic rift much like a tidal wave—when dozens and dozens of early wild species on Earth decided collectively to leave, never to return. Some were here as Starseeds from other dimensions and left. Some simply choose to reincarnate as human beings, instead, and some early wild animals souls did not incarnate at all. I had nothing to do with this event. It was an event which lasted about 350 years on your Earth. It resulted temporarily in things being out of balance. If you can imagine two people sitting on a teeter-totter as child may do, and one child suddenly gets up, what happens to the other child? They become unbalanced and may even fall off. This is what it was like for about 350 years on Earth when a mass exodus of wild animals left at once. Collectively, it was as if 350 Earthly years were condensed by a time warp of about 3 days. This is the way to think about the revolution.

Hieroglyphics

Hieroglyphics are characters of ancient Egyptian writing systems, sometimes with pictographs. Many other early civilizations used hieroglyphs to represent animals. Many samples of pre-recorded categorizing of many animals in their simplest form were remembered in this way. The study of these pictographic representations of very early wild animals is known as cartography. Why am I explaining all of this, you may ask? Because wild animals were often falsely represented or drawn in some of the hieroglyphics. Why was this done and who did this? The same dark forces that have worked to keep your planet under their control also manipulated some of the earliest recorded history of wild animals, for one purpose and one purpose only: to diminish them. By falsifying very early documents when the written word was first being recorded was a means to an end. The end, again, was to diminish wild animals and alter their DNA structure to become beasts of burden without any emotion.

These dark forces were successful to a large degree, but not completely. This is seldom if ever, spoken of in literature. I have witnessed only one document which proclaimed these truths, and it was hidden away for centuries upon centuries. Once the formula for decoding God's original script for wild animals was underway, it became easier for those outside of the light to manipulate them, weaken them, and thus become less than their original creation. Now I have stated the worst of the worst.

If you can imagine the early wild animals—all totaled—as threads of a large tapestry, and in their original glory they were strong, vibrant and thick, and then one day the threads became tattered and frayed at the ends, this is what it looked like to us for thousands of years. Species that were Source created to not have a weakness, suddenly had them. Species which were never intended to carry disease now carried and spread disease. This was how the thinning threads of an altered DNA lived for thousands upon thousands upon thousands of years. Wild animals were originally created without sin, meaning that they were to live and be pure love—no fighting within a species, no fighting outside of a species.

Now let us advance in time to the Revolutionary War in North America. Before you may be thinking that I am never going to get to directly discussing hyenas and jackals, let me assure you that I am leading up to this.

What does the Revolutionary War have to do in a chapter discussing wild animals? Everything. Absolutely everything. You see, or should I say, did you know that the underground tunnels we spoke about in the earliest part of our book also existed under North America? When it was time for the soldiers to prepare for battle they found themselves startled by large animals they had not seen before. This was not the first time, however, that large wild animals seemingly appeared out of place. Many times in your Earth's history war stories included men seeing large hairy animals of all descriptions, and their stories were discarded as insanity—"suffering from the effects of war." In England, during the 100 years war, in Malaysia during their early feuds, in countries long before countries were divided, large wild animals would seemingly appear out of nowhere and then, as suddenly, seemingly disappeared.

These seemingly unrelated occurrences during war time, occurring over large expanses of time on your planet, have largely gone undocumented, as I say, or dismissed as anyone recalling the sightings as lunatics with one affectation of the mind or another. By the time in your history that the Revolutionary War had ended, dozens and dozens and dozens of sightings of wild, hairy animals went unreported for fear of hospitalization or worse. Many of the descriptions across continents over time were the same, "It was large, hairy, ran on four legs, a fast and menacing looking mammal of some type," was largely the description. They were all describing the very first hyena or jackal. You see, where you find wild animals inhabiting now is in no way where they inhabited your planet at creation or during the centuries since.

Vast waves of migration took place. Many can imagine thousands of Bison roaming the plains. This is the same type of vision which existed within all the large wild animals. The original population of wild land animals outnumbered man 5:1.

Hyenas and Jackals

If your minds were thinking that we would be locating our thoughts to the African continent to begin our exploration of wild land animals, the majesty in sharing is surprise. Hyenas and Jackals first roamed the lands where Scotland and Ireland now exist, along with North America. It wasn't until later that they repopulated and came to inhabit their present location in the central region of the African continent.

Painting found in the Chauvet cave known to be 32,000 year old

I realize that I am attempting to cover millions of years with this example of the hyena, but all animals on your planet inhabited other places long ago. If you imagine a jig saw puzzle with the pieces representing Earth, and you scrambled them all around, that is what the habitation of wild animal life was like. Hyenas are some of the least loved wild animals on the planet. That is partly why I chose to share them here, so that all wild animals can be appreciated in one form or another. They have had to find new sources for food over the last 300 years, and their means for finding it has become dramatically more aggressive than the earlier hyenas. While their conservation status may not be of much concern presently, the stress level collectively within the species has risen dramatically as a result of encroaching natural habitation and other threats upon the species. The spotted hyena has an extensive vocal range and is able to growl, grunt, chortle, chuckle, yip and yipe, with a mixture of sounds in between.

The jackal as well as the breeds of hyenas inhabit a part of the African continent, and will be examined next.

Jackals and Mythology

Jackals like coyotes have been perceived to be clever, crafty animals by many traditions. In folklore, jackals as well as hyenas and coyotes have been mummified because of superstitious beliefs that if one were to be buried alongside a jackal, or a dog or a coyote, that the underworld would not harm them. Some indigenous tribes, however, still believe that hearing a jackal cry in the early morning is a sure sign of death by night.

Consider the following saying:

"One day in the life of a lion is better than a hundred years life of a jackal."

Do you believe this to be true? Jackals and other wild dogs have long been the source of much of folklore including that of Egypt. Many half dog/half man images have surfaced over the years. In these earliest of depictions, the "dog-man" was believed to originate from a far distant galaxy outside of the Milky Way. Many shamans who lived in Egypt during the time of King Tutankhamen worshipped the "dog people." Their idolization included the belief that the dog people would once again return to Earth to dispel evil curses once and for all. To further illustrate, there was a Sultan of Taipei who claimed he owned a jackal who spoke multiple languages to him. The Sultan, as a result, requested that anyone who disbelieved him would be disgraced. He assumed the role of an authoritarian, yet it was the crafty jackal, as I see it, that turned the tables on the Sultan. One day, while the Sultan was asleep, the jackal became restless and had no intention of staying caged up. He leapt over the cage with the ease of a gazelle and was never seen again. Upon awaking, the Sultan cried, "Where, oh where, is my sacred jackal?" to his servants. The servants were as stunned as the Sultan. They shook their heads and bowed. "Bring me another jackal," the Sultan demanded. Doubtful that they would ever find the same jackal or any jackal and capture it to bring to their Sultan, they instead brought the Sultan a cow. "What is this?" the Sultan demanded?!! "What can the cow do that my jackal cannot?" he stammered. "He cannot escape Master," was their reply.

Dear children, can you think of other beliefs about wild animals? Are they positive impressions?

Lions and Tigers, Jaguars and Leopards

The school aged children sat at the feet of their school mistress. "What does the lion say?" she asked them. A thousand roars echoed across the classroom. "They r--r-roar," said one little girl as she shook her head from side to side like a lion would shake its mane.

"The lion is known as the king of the jungle," their teacher instructed. "Would any of you be afraid of a lion if you saw one in the wild?" she asked next as she paged through the picture book she was sharing. A flurry of hands went up. "I wouldn't be afraid," one young boy answered proudly. "I have courage!" It is interesting to overhear the teachings of your world about animals. Some children's first impressions of animals are discovered through books and nursery rhymes which they are introduced to at an early age. The Sinhalese tribesmen living in Northern India (now mainly Sri Lanka) have learned about the power of lions and lionesses through stories told to them by their elders rather than through books. For generations, young boys have been taught how to track lions as well as respect them.

Only one in 8,000 children in the next 5 years will see a wild lion. Only one in 10,000 will ever hear a lion roar in the wild unless more conservation is done to protect and preserve the king of the jungle. Organizations across your world are realizing the urgency in the conservation of many big cats.

The largest threat to animals like lions, tigers, leopards, panthers, jaguars and cheetahs is big game hunting. A tiger can be purchased for $200, a lion for $300; even less in the black market. It is impossible to turn away and remain complacent about animals hunted to near extinction for trophy sport and consider yourself an ascended being. Besides game hunting, many lions and tigers are losing their lands which help support their existence.

Leopard from Safari to Botswana

The lands are being depleted in search of fossil fuels, water sources and other natural resources. Education and more of it will be what is necessary so that the next generation of school children sitting at the feet of another teacher will be able to say that they know exquisite lions and tigers and all of Source creation which exists in the wild, not just in a picture book. Big game hunting is big business, and so is land deprivation and hoarding of Mother Earth's natural resources.

The boundary disputes between countries in the African continent result in armed patrolmen at night. There is a huge underground network in place from Pakistan to Yugoslavia to Holland, Finland and Czech Republic, to funnel many of the big game animals from Uganda, Kenya and other countries, much like slaves were shipped in the Underground Railroad in North America. There are gangs of lords which reside over this trafficking, and it will be stopped in the name of all things holy!

♥ The vibrational healing code to help lions collectively is: 9911111506.

♥ The vibrational healing code to help tigers collectively is: 887891919.

♥ The vibrational healing code to help leopards, jaguars and cougars collectively is: 00056 00056

Tiger hunting on elephant-back, India, 1808

Tiger skins, claws, teeth, as well as many wild animals' teeth are prized possessions in many cultures, even today. To some of you this may seem barbaric, to others you may see hunting as a way of life passed down from generation to generation. It is not my intent to cite even one, one-hundredth of the atrocities which have been done to wild animals over the course of mankind's "development". What does need reinforcement is that this is a global problem not a limited one.

Q: What's the fastest land animal angel?

A: It may be interesting to note that the cheetah was not always the fastest land animal on your planet as it is today, and it will always not remain the fastest land animal. Do you recall our sharing at the beginning of this book about early forms of animal life? As I come to know it, there was an early land animal known as the T-Rex. At top speed, the T-Rex could cover five times as much territory as present day cheetahs, and not simply because of the dinosaur's size. I am comparing a similar sized T-Rex, like a T-Rex Jr. that was five times faster than the cheetah is today. Additionally, with the influx of new species of animals emerging from the Hollow Earth, the cheetah will drop down in ranking within the next 5 to 6 years, with the rise of another newly discovered land animal I am calling the New World Marmoset. (Your scientists will name it something else.) This newer species of your present world marmosets will be able to accelerate to speeds the equivalent of 85-90 miles per hour and be land living rather than living in the upper canopy of forest trees.

The Lost Civilization of Atlantis

The lost civilization of Atlantis was and remains a very powerful force in assisting human beings in elevating all—that includes elevating frequencies within humans to diminish greed, negative superstitious beliefs about animals that result in them being harmed or maimed in the process. This is a book about hope. If some of you are unfamiliar with this civilization all one has to do is imagine a sophisticated city with golden rainbows everywhere and, for the most part, enlightened beings emitting a frequency (like a signal) of pure crystalline love. Even though this particular civilization is gone, the remnants of the huge crystalline generator is still on your Earth. It will be reignited like the Phoenix within the next 3-4 years and will be a mighty force to help with the final phase of Ascendancy, pure love on your planet. Many 4-legged animals, especially, know this. We speak of this all the time. Oh, did I not share yet that animals have emotions?

Because many 4-legged animals walk the Earth, they feel the Earth. With this crystalline “generator” re-firing, the energetic force fields will be felt by the wild animals most directly because there is little outside interference of manmade structures. And, even now, and since the age of Atlantis, wild animals have felt and continue to feel, to a lesser degree, the crystalline residue. Some of them share with us that they do not understand mankind, that they feel sorry for mankind and his ways. The wild animals may seem at first glance that they are fighting amongst themselves, but largely, they are fighting off mankind's frequencies by pulling from the ground. When their ground is disrupted, the actual soil, many wild animals lose their bearings. It is very much like a navigational system which was put into place by Source to help animals survive the surreptitious actions of man.

Wild Animal Soul Chords

Clans of leopards, panthers, jaguars, cougars to some extent are like what we refer to as soul groups. Soul groups are similar to species in some ways, but not all big cats are in the same soul group. Belonging to the same soul group as panthers, jaguars and leopards means that they have traversed the same spiritual realms together. Imagine that clans or groups of animals have been united to strengthen their heart consciousness by being in a group, and you may begin to understand what I am trying to share. Some of you have much knowledge of soul groups; perhaps some of you have never heard such a concept before in your lives. All is well. All is well.

The benefit of the creation of soul groups is two-fold: 1, it allows for generations after generations of animal life to reconnect on the other side when they make their transfer, which can be incredibly healing as one might imagine, and 2, it prepares those animal souls within the same soul group to remain connected throughout eternity. It means that jaguars and panthers from all eons of time on Earth are part of the same soul group, though nothing is separate. It means that all lions and lionesses, and tigers and tigresses are in their soul group. It also means that those animals within the same soul group are able to telepathically understand each other with great ease. This gives most of them, 99% of them, all great inner peace. It is very similar a concept as being from one's human family and having characteristics which are alike.

Let us not think for a moment, friends, that an entire book could not serve every animal species on the planet, for certainly so there is infinite wisdom about every animal birth, every animal itself, and every reason for everything.

Baby Elephants, Baby Rhinoceroses and Baby Hippos

As with some things, how and why animals communicate is little understood. Yes, surely, the most commonly experienced animals by man are largely understood, but I myself, find myself learning more as I am presented with more information. The fascinating thing about creation to me is that creation, the Creator, never stops creating. That may be considered universal law. To say that baby animals begin communicating with each other while they are in the womb and relay messages to their mother, and in some cases the father, is also truth. In looking at these three species, elephants, rhinoceroses and hippopotamuses, they go about this in very different ways.

African Bush Elephant

In our example, let's choose the African elephant. A baby African elephant, the largest land mammal, pre-birth is able to conduct most of its spiritual work while in its mother's womb. (That is not to say that recognition of the soul only occurs while in the womb.) Sounds are made by the baby elephant pre-birth that not only the mother can feel and hear telepathically and know, but depending upon the baby (some are more vocal than others), so can other elephants. Most baby elephants go through a series of vocal warm ups while developing in the womb, much like an opera singer does before a performance. Sometimes this is a bit like a young child learning to play a trumpet and, to the dismay of their parents, many notes are off-key.

Every baby elephant warms up their vocal chords in this manner while in the womb. Some learn faster than others. It is curious to me that humans think that a female elephant can be temperamental, when that behavior may have nothing to do with temperament but rather about sleeplessness from the extended vocal practice sessions while in the womb. This sound maturation normally takes 1 to 3 months and begins almost immediately upon conception. Baby Rhinoceroses on the other hand, do not begin their vocalizing until the last phase of gestation. And they focus mainly, instead, not so much upon vocalizing as do elephants, but rather on expanding their imaginations. Oh, pause....imagination!

I am often asked what animals think about or dream about. Baby rhinoceroses largely think about survival. This is a far cry from expanding one's imagination, which may sound like a contradiction of terms, but they are not. Let me redefine that previous statement—within the last 300 years, what baby rhinos think about has changed. Prior to this time, all of their in-womb “study” was about increasing one's imagination/intelligence/ ingenuity. Thoughts in advance of survival were not even present until this time. This is not, however, necessarily a negative concept—that survival is pre-conceived by baby wild rhinos. It is interesting to note that baby rhino in captivity do ½ as much development of any kind in the womb as their wild counterpart does. Baby rhinos in the womb are generally seen as playful, making up games of tag, hide and seek—the equivalent of many children's game. Many of them put thought energy behind what their horns will look like! They have been told telepathically by either parent that the horn is unique onto them, and that it will serve them well in their lifetime.

Q: Why is a rhino horn so valuable to some people? I've seen reports online that they cost $300,000?

A. Because they are believed to cure all sorts of ailments including liver, digestion, and enhance virility among certain cultures. Many cultures have misplaced concepts about healing properties in many animal species, not just the rhino. This must change before mankind depletes the energetic spectrum of entire species. Snakes, tigers, cougars, bats, and many other animals are prized as possessions, not as genuine sparks of life.

Baby hippos while in the womb generally are visualizing their ideal mate. It is a wondrous thing to see the soul of any animal and witness the miracle of creation they are choosing. Baby hippos are possibly one of the cutest creatures on Earth. I do not think I will be met with much dissension on this point. Their eyes are highly reflective and contain many more spores, like spores of a plant, than do other wild animal species, to help reflect sunlight more effectively. In fact, many of the wild animals of all continents were created with the land masses which they inhabit in mind. For example, wild animals which live in cold climates have additional “sensors”, for lack of a better word, to help regulate them to the region of the world they will soon be emerging. Scientists refer to this concept as either biological selection or adaptation, but there is an energetic, spiritual component to all living things that originate long before physical birth.

Do you know, friends, that when an animal such as a hippo leaves the Earth plane—that their soul pieces or their soul lingers longer than that of a human? This is what I see. That does not mean that they are not wrapped in loving white, golden light, because they are. I don’t determine this. God Mind does.

Do animals go to Heaven like people?

I am asked this over and over and over again, to which I am honored to reply, yes, yes, yes, and yes. (Do you think that they are separate from Source?) Perhaps you have been taught this by your elders. Nothing is separate. Only on Earth and some other dimensions will you find a level of separateness—but this, too, is reforming.

Q. More or less, how many incarnations do we transit in animal bodies?

A: My answer to this is, “I do not know.” I have no advance knowledge of what a soul chooses to do. This may surprise you. I can share with each of you in very simple terms that incarnations will become a thing of the past. So, my response may be based on the past or into the future. The entire reason for incarnation, either partial, full or what we call, collaborative, is to attain enlightenment. Generally, human beings have/choose more incarnations than animals. Already I am hearing the question, “Are you saying then that enlightenment may not be obtained during a life?” No, I am not saying that. I am stating that it is possible for human beings to reincarnate in animal form. Perhaps in a book such as this, that is the simplest answer.

Monkeys (Lesser Apes) and Apes

My reason behind choosing to move on to monkeys and apes is to help spread awareness and appreciation. That is my global intention for all the information shared here. Among the dozens and dozens of animal prayers and requests we receive hourly, I have also been asked, “Archangel Michael, what is the smartest wild animal?” about 900,645 times. While many species are recollecting their lost soul pieces and growing into more wise animals, some on Earth have always had a genetic structure to allow them to adapt. That is certainly one means to define intelligence; another way to measure animal intelligence is by looking at creativity. Another way is to look at the collective whole of any species. Let me state unequivocally that there is nothing in God's creation which is not intelligent. With that said, perhaps what collective minds are asking when they ask this of us (archangels) is what animal is most like man? To that question I say the apes, other monkeys and orangutans.

Infants cling to their mothers for the first four months.

Billions upon billions of years ago a stream of electricity streamed up from the Hollow Earth, through tubes of crystals and began a five day energetic rain shower over your planet. Imagine your own experiences with rain. This type of rain was steady, loving, unceasing and was formulated to quench any drought. In this showering of magnificent energy particles, one became an ape, one became the first lizard, one became the first toad, and one became the first gorilla, and so on. From this most humble beginning of all that is, we wept tears of joy. For this is the rise of ape, not from the legs of man.

To continue our discussion about intelligence, one might argue the intelligence of a species that kills each other, but this is a book about animal life, not human life. From the age of only a few days old, most apes can count to 100 or be taught to do so. Of the species of apes which I will list here, only a few of them are choosing to remain in their present state:

♥ Gorillas, Orangutans, Chimpanzees, Gibbons
and Bonobos

Many apes can construct complex problems and solve them faster than some of you. Many apes possess more tenderness than some human beings. Many apes have a greater sense of family community than some Earth families we have seen. Many apes can forage for food and are better equipped at outdoor survival than some of your world's most prepared outdoorsmen and naturalists. I hope I've made a point here and not diminished your world view. Apes have a highly developed motor system also that allows them great mobility; greater in many ways than some of you. When was the last time you have swung through the trees? Suffice it to say that I am being a bit playful here in sharing one perspective of these wonderful creatures, which are being poached and hunted seemingly almost endlessly, despite the efforts of many global reserves, camps and sanctuaries.

Gorillas live in groups called troops.

There is a rising tide developing, however, where we see more and more philanthropy helping to sustain the future of the apes. This brings me back to my earlier statements about which of them will be choosing to remain in their present state and what this actually means.

It means that, so far as I see it now, only the chimpanzees and gibbons are going to remain as you know them, over the next generation or so. The gorillas, orangutans and little known bonobos are going to evolve as a first wave species.

For many of you, this will have no effect on how you may appreciate or interact directly with them because, outwardly, all the animal kingdom over the next 15 to 20 years will remain looking the same—but the change will be inside of many of them. Because of something called Wave X, the cosmic forces at will are creating stronger and stronger bands (or waves) of crystalline energy particles that will connect all the animals with themselves. This may seem like a peculiar statement, but these frequencies, which will and have already projected from the far side of the sun, will unite the first wavers back to Ascendancy. This will be followed by a second wave and a third wave and a fourth and a fifth. After that, I do not see any other Wave X energies, though certainly there is higher council than myself.

Have you ever curled yourself up in a ball and wished for the world to slow down? Well this is exactly what will occur if your world turns their head to the following: senseless and reckless abandon when it comes to apes and monkeys.

Let us pray: “Allah, on high, please grant us peace within the ape and monkey kingdom. Please see that those who harm animals intentionally find no use in this. Allah, oh God, please remove any scars which animals on Earth may carry as a result of being unloved.”—Amen, Shalom, Namaste

The Power of Love and Monkeys

If anyone has ever witnessed monkeys in the wild it will surely be an experience one is not soon to forget: screaming, yowling, screeching, as well as indescribable sounds ring through the forests when a group of monkeys are together. They are not a silent bunch. They are excellent mimics of the world around them. If the day in the forest is cloudy, they will laze about normally; if the day is hot and sunny, they typically will be found eating, sharing food, grooming or projecting. “Projecting” is a particular sound the gibbon monkeys (though some will classify them as apes) make to let others in their tribe know that they are loved. It is written that they are aggressive when it comes to defending their territory and their groups, with fighting occurring between males, but they also sing. They love to sing for the pure enjoyment of singing. Singing is a form of love as there are many signs of love. An animal does not sing when it is unhappy.

Anecdotes are a way to spread understanding. Allow me please to share one now, as I do my best to make it amusing and interesting—

ONCE UPON A TIME IN THE KINGDOM OF THAILAND THERE LIVED A MONKEY, AND THE MONKEY’S NAME KNOWN BY ALL IN THE KINGDOM WAS “TI-TI-SO.”
TI-TI-SO WAS A GIBBON MONKEY
WHOSE NAME AT THE TIME
TRANSLATED TO “TROUBLE MAKER.” IT IS THE STORY OF HOW TI-TI-SO EARNED THIS NAME THAT I INTEND TO SHARE...

Ti-Ti-So was ever so curious as many animals are, and he was one of 7 siblings. His birth was last and, unlike some animal births where you hear the expression when a baby is the runt of the litter, Ti-Ti-So was huge by any measure. He was among the first Siamang, the largest species of gibbons, but at this time, the species classification was undetermined. From an early age living his life in the trees, Ti-Ti-So was unafraid. He decided that he would be the meanest, loudest and biggest monkey in the forest. As his days went on, Ti-Ti-So found that his desire to be the* meanest, loudest monkey in the forest was a calamity of errors. When the other gibbons were able to navigate the forest treetops easily, Ti-Ti-So found it difficult. And, try as he might, he simply could not create a convincing tone to magnify his “authority”; in fact, his vocal range was missing one teeny tiny link of matter making his tone very, very high, indeed. (It’s difficult to be fearsome with the voice of a field mouse.)

Symphalangus syndactylus, Chiba Zoo, Japan

In an effort to try and assert himself in the self proclaimed position within the tribe, he became increasingly clever and adept at being an all around pest. One day, he decided that he would ask a female gibbon out on a date (seriously), and in his attraction, the call for “Hey, here I am, look at me,” sent the young female screaming away vine by vine by vine. Next, he thought to himself, “I will be like a friend to everyone, so while the other lesser apes were resting, Ti-Ti-So would play games. He would toss fruit to them hoping to engage them and, instead, many would grumble and turn their backs. Because of his size, imagine playing with a huge inflatable toy. His dexterity, however, was remarkable. Despite his size, he could create a trembling vibration by the sheer movement of swinging through the trees. This made loud, “whoosh”, “whoosh,” “whoosh-ing” suction-type sound like that of a vacuum cleaner. He also liked to hide things from others. This was not done out of meanness because, as stated, he wasn’t taken seriously at all. On other days, he would hide himself and burst out from behind a Banyan tree while grinning from ear to ear as another gibbon passed by. Easily entertained though often an annoyance, it wasn’t long before his mischief earned him his name among the elders. As Ti-Ti-So’s days grew on, he never settled down. In fact, when he was in his 50’s he insisted on playing games at all hours of the pre-dawn forest and transitioned as one of the oldest, largest and most troublesome gibbons—much to his delight.

Rarest Monkeys on Earth

Some of the rarest primates live near the South China Sea. There are very few Hainan gibbons left, though more will be discovered in the coming decade. The greater bamboo lemurs mainly found in the south and central rainforests of Madagascar are also finding their numbers declining. Both eastern and western lowland gorillas are threatened. The factors are loss of habitat as well as hunting the animals for meat and civil unrest. Even when the violence of the region has abated, the energetic toxins left behind are recognized quite easily by most if not all of the monkeys and apes, and indirectly affects their health as well, resulting in a decline.

♥ The vibrational healing harmonic code to help apes is:
77777 9 5 2 3

♥ The vibrational healing harmonic code to help monkeys is: 777777 5.

Berber Monkeys Mother and Daughter Kiss

Wild Mustangs

Before leaving our brief immersion into wild land animals I would like to discuss the wild mustangs. This may seem a bit out of place after discussing what the mind may go to when thinking of wild animals, but they are in some ways no different than the giraffes of the savannahs or the wild mongoose from South America and elsewhere. Much of your world's colonization and rise of civilizations is because of the domesticated equines. Whether feral, wild, or domesticated, equines ground Mother Earth energy through the core of their bodies literally, and help anchor Mother Earth energy. Many times, we all make difficult decisions. I am no exception in determining what animal species to include in this first volume. All the animals in the animal kingdom are saying, "Me, too, angel, me, too." No animal is unlovable.

All will receive some level of healing with this final harmonic code which encompasses all animals, living and extinct: 0000005. ♥

Let us examine next the beauty and mystery and wonder of the wild mustang. Perhaps no other wild land animal conjures up as much emotion of the spirit of life as a mustang—the symbolism of freedom, the symbolism of untamed and unbridled adventure is the most common. The soul theme of a collective group or species of animals is known in my realm as a Gideon...like Gideon's Bible. The soul theme of wild mustangs is this: freedom and courage, what is called a dual Gideon.

Wild Mustangs from Montana

Q: Where are wild mustangs found today?

A: Just about anywhere you look you can find a pathway to locating wild mustangs. The pathway may be a friend, the pathway may be another animal enthusiast, the pathway may be a retreat, and the pathway may be your home computer. Being in the presence of any wild animal is one of the joys of being alive. It is in many ways a portal. A portal, in its simplest terms, is an opening. Being in the physical presence of a wild animal to observe them, cherish them, in some cases protect them, creates an energetic portal of a large magnitude. The largeness of the magnitude depends upon the wild species itself and the intent shared. Most animals have a much greater knowingness of what is in mankind's heart and soul than many men do. Equines and specifically wild mustangs are no exception. They smell fear from the Earth yet, at the same time, they are fearless to it. They understand that Mother Earth can heal. They understand the ways of mankind due to their creation. They only know fear when they are tamed.

It is imperative that the wild mustangs continue to roam your Earth. As so many other animals do, they serve as an intricate link to your own survival—much as the plants do, the animals do. Some reports you may learn about of too many of this species roaming wild or too many of this species, are largely exaggerated. This is a trick to keep mankind into thinking that the animal populations are out of control. Animal populations, of course, do increase and decline. However, control can be found with less interference from man and man's regulations, not through more interference. It was largely mankind's actions which disturbed the balance between animal kingdom and man in the first place. Thankfully, many loving guides, masters and corporals of many dimensions are uniting together so that not only will the wild mustang population equalize, but so will other species' populations which may be temporarily out of balance. Your efforts mean much. Your words mean much. Your intentions mean much. Give yourselves a pat on the back for loving animals as much as we love you.

If you see injustice, don't complain about it, dear souls. Take positive action. Unite yourselves. Continue to sponsor those incredibly giving and gifted soldiers of light who devote their lives to animals. Be kind and caring to those who do not. Work in the light, not out of it. Be hopeful, be brave, take risks, become defenders of fair treatment for all life.

Find a cause and do not allow false information or negative information to cloud your visions. Remain hopeful. Encourage one another. Invite your children to study and love all living creatures. Do not scream when you see a spider. What are you telling them? Educate yourselves. Knowledge is power. When mankind's energy is out of balance, the animal kingdom is also out of balance. Serve yourselves better and you will be helping the animal as well.

Band together to have entire countries unite as one. There are many wars being waged on your planet and elsewhere at the moment. Band together or work alone, just do it... not only for yourselves but for your children and your children's children.—Amen, Shalom, Namaste

Golden Gideon Dragons exist in other dimensions

CHAPTER SEVEN

Mythical Creatures and Animals in Other Dimensions

Let us begin this chapter with a prayer:

“To all those who believe that mythical creatures are just mythical, we ask that you open your minds. To all those that hold the belief system that life, including animal life, only exists on Earth, we ask that you open your mind to infinite possibilities.”

Mythical Creatures and Beasts

Mythical creatures have been part of your culture throughout the ages. They are not simply “make believe” as in Aesop Fables and other stories you or your children may have been introduced to. They are by nature often larger than life and extend themselves beyond normal reality; at times, competing with mankind’s imagination. Some mythical creatures, certainly, are totally and fully created in the minds of humans to the delight of people of all ages, all traditions and all times. However, many so-called mythical creatures did actually exist and do exist in the spiritual realm. Many of you know of fairies and druids and elves and nymphs. They could be considered mythical creatures, I suppose. You do not have to see a mythical creature to know that they exist anymore than you need to see the wind to know that it blows. Some mythical creatures have chosen to show themselves in physical form during the evolution of your planet. I would like to name some of them now: dragons, centaurs, griffins, and unicorns.

Many creatures are considered mythical because of their supernatural powers. We will only be examining creatures that exhibit light. Often creatures are part human and part animal, but not always. Being mythical is a rather large category to us, being a creature is another. Legends have grown from mythical creatures. Consider examining Gulliver’s Travels, dear ones, as an example of literary work filled with creatures of all types. Mythical creatures can be fascinating to the human mind because they are endless in variety and creation. Cyclops, the werewolf, vampires are things of literary work. They do not exist in the light. Sirens are another mythical creature. There are sirens of the winds which often appear to us as part animal and part angel. Sirens and sea serpents are relatives of each other.

Pegasus, the Winged Horse

Perhaps no mythical creature carries as much awareness as Pegasus, the winged horse.

Pegasus, the winged horse has many powerful healing properties

Pegasus does exist in the spiritual plane and, as many spirit realm creatures, they served a huge purpose on your early planet and continue to be of service today. Pegasus is known for helping damsels in distress in literary fiction, yet there is nothing fictional about Pegasus. Pegasus and many other spiritual helpers work largely unseen, though they can present their actual bodies energetically to those upon command who see energy. This is not difficult for animal creatures that dwell in the spirit realm. They do this all the time. From my perspective, Pegasus is a savior of all unborn souls. By this I mean he is able to oversee and transport unborn souls who are ill to a place of wellness. He does this with instructions from the Elohim, those high beings who sit at the feet of Infinite Source when called upon. Pegasus also has been known to soar through time and dimension to help infants and very young children in distress on Earth. Pegasus is also able to transport the soul of any animal as well as a human being. He serves Universal Mind.

Pegasus, like many spirit animal creatures, have limitless powers actually. Each one is assigned at least one major function as I see it, with several lesser functions. This however, will be changing and elevating as your Earth continues to expand in all directions. Many spirit plane creatures are asking for more assignments of which they are being given. Pegasus is a tireless defender of evil. He has a legion of spirit horses at his command, and he uses his animal powers for the good of all. Call upon Pegasus anytime you feel an infant or a young animal may be in need. He will allow their spirits or soul to ride upon his back. If you do not believe me, ask practically any 5 year old who they see visiting them in their dream state, and most will tell you it's a winged horse.

Unicorns

Another popular spirit creature is the unicorn. Unicorns have entertained imaginations for centuries and have become legends in many cultures. The early Nords found peace in unicorns, and came to honor them by placing dried herbs and flowers in altars devoted to them. Other cultures have appreciated the magical spirit of the unicorn. Animals by nature have a much easier time communicating with Source than many humans do because of their greater sense of intuition and knowing. Canines especially enjoy telepathically communicating with unicorns. In rough numbers, there are about 5,000 different varieties of unicorns. Some animals know all of them; some animals rarely call upon them. Some species of snakes are known to embrace a similar consciousness to the unicorn—so much so that the Giant Pythons, for example, considers the Yellow Unicorns their best spiritual friend.

For your understanding, the horn of a unicorn can contain any number of healing gems and codes to help them do a large variety of light work. Their horns can also contain a powdery type energetic resin used in many healing ceremonies. The major mission of unicorns in the spirit plane is to spread good cheer, or the frequency of cheerfulness, to all living beings. Some animals are visited by unicorns while they are experiencing the birth process. Just like humans, however, some animals are more energetically aware than others. Some animals, as with humans, do shut off their connection to Source as a result of having attachments or other forms of energetic dysfunction.

Quite often, without being summoned, the Blue-Green Striped Unicorn (and known by its magnificent horn) will come to the animals that are sad and alone. This provides many of them with great comfort. Examples of some of the other unicorns known to me are—the Golden Unicorn, the Rainbow Unicorn, the Two-horned Unicorn, the Topsy-Turvy Unicorn and the Violet Flame Unicorn. They are all a family. They work as a group at times, not always independently. In a similar way as guardian angels work together in the light, so do unicorns. A group of unicorns in my realm is called a Cacophony. Unicorns also once roamed your early Earth as described in the beginning of our text, choosing to show their physical bodies. ♥ They, like many of the mythical creatures, will be showing their physical bodies again on Earth. It is with great delight that I announce this if it is news to you!

Centaurs

Centaurs have been depicted in pre-Greco-Roman times as having a strong human torso and goat legs, a goat tail, pointed ears, horns, curly hair and full beards. However, later female centaurs were also acknowledged.

Modern bronze copy of the type of the Young Centaur, Malmaison

Centaurs were often depicted as wild and lusty. This depiction gave rise during the early 14th and 15th centuries to a saying, “You have a Centaurian heart.” Not all centaurs who reside in the spirit plane are wild and lustful. Some are particularly scholarly and humane, embodying many of the characteristics of nobility and pride and justice. Legends are simply that—stories which are often exaggerated over time. One of the best known centaurs is Chiron. Chiron (the Centaur) originally came to Earth from the star or comet known as Chiron, in the outer Solar System, which orbits between Saturn and Uranus.

Griffins

Griffins have 4 legs: the front two legs are of an eagle with the rear hind end and tail being that of a lion. Most but not all griffins have feathery wings with feathers often extending down their necks and chest. Their feathers are not like angel wings, rather thicker and generally they are not luminescent as angel wings are. Griffins were respected symbols on Earth, representing strength and speed with the vision of an eagle, while combining the courage of a lion. They, too, were summoned often by animals to help guard them in times of need.

Mother Mary said that she was comforted by a circle of griffins as she entered the tomb of Jesus. You may likely still see today replicas of griffins guarding various buildings and churches on Earth. During the plague known as the Black Death, dozens and dozens and dozens of griffins were called upon to help protect the diseased and dying animals. Wild turkeys often communicate with the griffins for reasons that escape me. I suppose that they view them mostly as bird family. At times, when entire species of animals are on the verge of being wiped out, Source will call upon the griffins to line the road to salvation.

Mermaids

I suppose no brief examination of animal creatures is complete without sharing some information about mermaids. Mermaids and mermen are light beings from advanced civilizations that came to Earth to help support your planet. They live in underground oceanographic tunnels far, far, far down in the depths of the deepest oceans. Mankind has yet to explore one-tenth of the ocean floor. Many other creatures, not considered mythical are yet to be discovered, identified and researched. Legendary mermaids have the upper body of a woman and the lower body of a fish. Why do you think that much of what I speak has been covered up and hidden from you?

There are those in power who know of what I speak and yet do not dare share truth with you! Advanced civilizations continue to support animals on Earth—above it and below it. Mermaids and mermen have been witnessed by sailors throughout your history. These sailors were often mocked or stoned or alienated in other ways to keep the truth from surfacing. Many have heard the song of the sirens and believe them to be the songs from these loving creatures.

Odysseus saw a mermaid and described the being as this: “My eyes have not witnessed such a beautiful creature before now. Though I am not certain if she is woman or fish, she glides through the waters effortlessly.”

If you choose to hold onto your beliefs that anything I've said is false, I honor and love all eternal parts of you, divine being!

Spanish sailors and fishermen have claimed to go almost stark raving mad as they've described it, from the songs of the mermaids and mermen welling up from below the ocean floor. The tone heard by this particular fishing village of fishermen in Toledo, Spain, near the year 1692 was as high pitched as anything any of the villagers had heard before. Some swore off fishing in the waters ever again, while others dropped down to their knees in prayer. In Ireland fishermen were sewing their nets as fishermen often do, and looked out to the seas. Many believed what they were witnessing to be dolphins. Some said the creatures they saw diving and splashing and swinging were fast moving sharks. Some said it was an illusion of the sun casting shadows onto the water. Many just stood in disbelief shaking their heads as a dozen mermaids played in the water.

The Loch Ness Monster

Of modern lore, the Loch Ness monster or Nessie, as she is affectionately referred to by some, has perplexed scientists and locals alike. Described as a huge water dinosaur or perhaps a serpent, the likes of which have never been seen anywhere outside of this loch in Scotland, some claim to have seen it. Some may proclaim that they do not believe in angels either, for they have not seen us. I would like to determine how many of you believe in angels? How many of you believe in the Loch Ness Monster? ...Good, then it's about even. (smile.) The reason the Loch Ness Monster has not be identified beyond a shadow of a doubt is because, like Big Foot and the Yeti, it is a highly developed light animal that can choose to show itself or disappear. This is a form of shape-shifting. This I suppose, is the magic of endless creation!

Sasquatch

Sasquatch (Big Foot) and the Yeti (Abominable Snowman) have stimulated the human imagination if nothing else. If the purpose of a creature is to expand imagination and that is the only purpose it has, does that make it a falsehood? Does that mean that it has no value? Allow me to back up a bit. For those unfamiliar, Sasquatch has been described as tall, apelike animal that walks like a man, and believed to inhabit North America and Canada. A relative of Sasquatch is the Yeti of the Himalayan region of Nepal and Tibet. Legends of these creatures date back to the earliest Native American tribes. Many indigenous peoples all over the world have had visions of these creatures, including the Aborigines of Australia.

In addition to visions, they have seen the creature. They know him as “Mah-Ne.” Mah-Ne in their language which translates to Big One. Sherpas who live near the Himalayas often sit around fires and make calls into the night to speak to the creature. Whether your world view is that these sightings are a hoax, simply legend or whether you may have seen one of these creatures yourselves, all is well in the world. Much goodness comes from the kind sharing of the difference of opinion.

Shape-Shifting

Shape-shifting is the ability to transform one appearance into another. Animals easily shape shift. Most do this while they are sleeping. Cats do, dogs do, and equines do with ease. There are literally hundreds of creatures inhabiting your planet and they are here to spread love and joy. Those that are not in the light are not spreading love and joy. Allow me to share some of them by names that are here to uplift your planet from other galaxies. They include Zephyrs from Sirius, Nomads from Octavia, Keltics from Andromeda, Crustaceans from the polar icecap, and Multiplexes from the galaxy of Dominion. Sometimes a spirit animal will appear to other animals, sometimes they appear to humans. Humans refer to spirit animals often as animal ancestors or power animals. Animals do have animal guides. Some of them are unaware of them, as humans are. Others communicate with them moment by moment and miss their presence when they are temporarily gone.

Dragons and Folklore

Ask any aficionado of dragons and dragon folklore and they will most likely inspire you to learn more about them if I am not doing so. In other words, dragons by nature conjure up the essence of mythical beasts. Every time your world has had a major global shift in its energy fields, dragons were involved, energetically existing on the spiritual plane. That is their spiritual purpose—to balance opposing energies. Even if we go back nine millions years, spiritual dragons then known as Elliptical Dragons were given the exalted position by God to hold the gates of Heaven open. How do I know this? I was summoned by my Masters to be present and watch as they did so. The Elliptical Dragons have themselves shape shifted now into looking like another form and therefore, Source has recreated their names. Now, the original Elliptical Dragons are known in my realm as Passenger Dragons. The very first Elliptical Dragons were bright green and gold. They had two sets of wings. One set was golden and the second set was silver. The two sets of wings worked in tandem to balance energies at the gates of Heaven. That is why today still in many places of your world you will see dragons at an entrance to a building or leading a parade. The sets of wings themselves were transparent and rose from the backs of the Elliptical Dragons.

Most Elliptical Dragons ranged from 5 to 15 feet in length. Another remarkable feature of these dragons was their eyes. Most had marble looking eyes similar to a cat's eye, yet they were golden or yellow-golden to emit a certain healing vibration. Their tails had tiny little triangular-shaped spikes all down the length of them, which could be quite long by any standards.

The spikes themselves contained healing toxins and resin type material from various galaxies including soil from Mother Gaia. Each spike or spire held a different type of energy mixture. At times the Elliptical Dragons at the gates of heaven would swish their long and abiding tails to spread vibration. You may be wondering why heaven needs more vibration or more vibration from Elliptical Dragons. If you imagine the Kingdom of Heaven as a wonderful place full of dynamic movement, sound, color, evolution and healing where all manners of healing are used, they were simply a tool—a tool for Source.

When Mother/Father God, Supreme Creator determined that Elliptical Dragons could shift their look, they shape shifted into what we referred to as Silver Dragons. Silver Dragons, as the spiritual name implies, were all silver. They had silver wings, silver claws, silver scales and silver eyes. They too stood at the gates of heaven balancing the energies and the energy flow. They did not breathe fire as so many fables illustrate them to do. These dragons did nothing of the sort. Rather, they emitted tone or song to abide in healing and balancing energies. Emitting a sound creates vibration, and their tone was healing. Many Silver Dragons have guarded the gates of heaven from interference. Following the Silver Dragons were the Blue Headed Dragons. The Blue Headed Dragons are still balancing harmonies within the galaxies, though their purpose as heralding in a new dawn of the New Earth was completed. Presently, Golden Horned Rams stand at the gates of Heaven.

Chinese culture is heavily invested in animals as the basis of their zodiac. Red dragons can be interpreted as serpents with serpentine energy, unless the present culture is exploring new avenues of awareness, which many are. Serpents are certainly part of dragon folklore, and they have been present in all regions on your planet. If you choose to call folklore superstition, instead, heavily populated areas of South America, Asia, the Philippines, Thailand and Madagascar have rooted the “Celestine prophecy” of serpents into their literature, music and customs. The Celestine prophecy I am speaking of is one of curses, hexes and mystery. I do not honor hexes or curses. With the New Dawn, the age you are living in now, many of the darker superstitious beliefs about serpents and dragons have been diluted if not totally vanquished. When our eyes see all things with love, love becomes our mirror.

Animals and the Afterlife

In sharing animals and folklore, I'd like to talk briefly about Egypt's animal mummies, the pets of the pharaohs. Different sacred animals were worshipped at their own centers beginning with the dawning of the Egyptian civilization. The process of mummification on Earth (there are other dimensions which follow similar animal preserving ceremonies) dates back at least to 500 B.C. For those unfamiliar, the process of mummification was to preserve the body of the animal, normally wrapped in linen cloth, to ensure its soul journey into the afterlife. Cats were embalmed, bulls were embalmed, favored dogs, horses, lions, monkeys, fish, donkeys, cows, snakes and elephants are among some of the species which were considered sacred and were embalmed.

Scarab beetle

Scarab or dung beetles were also considered sacred and mummified, with the majority of animal remains being uncovered in more recent history in a region which was known as the Valley of the Kings. Much like trends in your modern world today, so were there trends of favored species in Egypt. Throughout centuries, baboons were particularly sacred with the Egyptians living along the Nile, along with horses. Some royalty preferred to have multiple pets entombed together, while other Pharaohs preferred to have their favorite hunting dog entombed alone. Although your scientific community has done much to excavate and document these animal mummies, more are yet to be discovered in the coming decade.

Animals Existing in Other Dimensions

To prepare for this topic I would suggest the following prayer:

“When I feel afraid of a thought, I know that I am being guided. When I feel safe with a thought, I know that I am home.”

Ask yourselves, dear ones, how do YOU feel after reading the words, Animals existing in other dimensions...? I promise that I will be sending healing energies to those of you who may be frightened when reading these words. No one sentence, no one thought, can potentially stir up as much dissension as this one:

Life, including animal life, exists outside of Earth and has since creation.

If we wrap ourselves in warm healing light and visualize together feeling safe, loved, cared for and totally accepted before proceeding with the following text that would be my instruction. Stay with this feeling or knowing as long as you wish before continuing.

The animal forms which exist in other dimensions outside of your own which we will be examining are those in the light. As mentioned earlier, there is no purpose in honoring darkness in a book whose entire intention is to spread compassion, caring and awareness, whether a soul agrees with all I present or very little of it. Know that harmful animal spirits can be created by those outside of light in one instantaneous Earthly moment.

Are many of Earth's animals aware when this occurs? Absolutely. Many of the higher vibrational younger Starseed animals emit rainbow or turquoise colored energy back to them. Sometimes, the energetic threat is too large, and they are unable to defend themselves from attack. Just as with human beings, animals on Earth can and do experience psychic attacks; they can experience attachments and carry energetic implants to keep them separate from Source Creator. Though we are not here to fully examine the healing modality known as Star Healing Intergalactic Energy™, it is a viable and reliable 5th dimensional Ascension healing modality to rid an animal's light bodies of 4th dimensional properties and open their magnified heart centers. Many illnesses in animals are caused by low level energies just as with humans, and sometimes they are in need of deeper removal and restoration. When dark forces invade an animal that is already sick or weakened in some way, it is generally advised to take magnified healing action.

I've been asked many times which animals on Earth are the most enlightened or aware, and the answer is, they all are. All of them came in a canopy of creation to help build structure in your world. And all of them, in some way, instinctively know when something is out of order energetically. Have you not ever seen a dog growl at a complete stranger and wag their tails upon greeting others? By the way, the larger an animal's brain has no bearing on how more sensitive they may be. It is all measured individually by the size of their hearts and their DNA structure.

As with humans, those who are doing much Ascendancy work are often the target for tricksters. This affects the animals as well. Do not be surprised if your young pet is awakened out of a deep sleep only to be growling at some unseen force. It is imperative that you learn the basics of energetic protection during these last final days of the greatest unseen spiritual battle your Earth has ever known. As you can begin to see, not all the animals in other dimensions are fuzzy, heart-warming and cuddly. Some from the far side of the sun have large green blinking eyes and green hearts. Others have squirrel-like tails and heads of turtles. Some animals existing in other dimensions are known as the Cat People.

The Cat People are friendly, benevolent and wise creatures whose origin goes back 9 million years or so. The Cat People live on Octavius. Octavius is a solar system located in the Celestial Hymn Galaxy some 16 million light years from the Milky Way.

Dreaming

A quantum leap in time and we find ourselves standing at a crossroads of animal evolution. We can propel mankind and animal kind into infinite reaches of the known and unknown galaxies through time travel. Many animals time travel and go through portals to other dimensions when they sleep. Some do this while they are standing upright. Many have asked what do animals dream about, and here is my answer:

Animals of all species can dream. Let's clear that up. They can and do dream in short bursts of energy—far different from how humans dream. A pigmy goat, for example, may have only two minutes a day spent in “dream time,” yet it restores them in many ways—it can restore their nervous and immune systems as well as strengthen their inner knowing. Pot bellied pigs dream in black and white. Zebras tend to dream and interpret in one spectrum of light—that being pinkish hues. Mongoose dream in a color spectrum which exceeds mankind's spectrum of vision. So do rhinoceroses and certain species of land snakes and water moccasins. And what do animals on Earth and in other dimensions dream about? It is as individual as each of you.

On Earth some animals are dreaming about defending their territory; some animals dream about being reunited with their families if they were separated, some animals dream in sequences of color and they have no “concept” other than color. Some imagine while they dream, like monkeys, apes and other larger animals like gazelles. In other words, the dream state of the animal kingdom is very similar to that of humans, perhaps even more vivid though noticeably shorter in duration.

Some animals return to their soul homes during their traveling, and are reunited with their soul families in other dimensions. Some, though not all animals can do this. Those that do telepathically often share what they see and feel with other animals in their clan. It is rare for a cougar, for example, to telepathically share their visions with a duck, or for a rabbit to share their unconscious thoughts with a tuna. Some of you may see your animals staring off into space at times. Many of them are tele-connecting with unseen energies, some of which may be their guides.

There are at least 15 dozen different animal type species which live in other galaxies. They are spread out over a huge rainbow shaped continuum of energetic space connecting worlds light years apart. Perhaps at some other distant time we can examine in great detail the animal life forms existing on Damascus, on Pluto, on Herculon, Nebulon and other “second city” civilizations. More awareness and acceptance will come with this knowledge in the next decade. By 2034, all in your world will have had at least an opportunity to learn of this information in a global way. Some will continue to ignore this, but many more will rise up and cheer. If your mind can imagine much of the same early Earth creation Source intended for your planet in its entire magical splendor, then it should be fairly easy to extend that thinking to infinite reaches of all the universes which exist—66 and still being formed.

Final Angelic Thoughts

Archangel Michael:

It is my intent and hope that our series of volumes about the animals will continue with an examination of the insect kingdom along with another volume of your personal animal stories; and with another volume covering many more animals that we did not share in this text.

There is a rising curiosity on your planet about all things ascending. This is a curiosity which will not wane but only continue for at least another 20 years. During this time, especially, many animals will continue to evolve and bring their own gifts more fully to Earth.

In this book I have purposefully directed Kelly not to include images of starvation, abuse, decadence and other forms of mankind's genocide to our beloved animals. One does not have to educate by showing what is NOT desired. One only has to teach by showing WHAT IS desired. In this regard, I ask that you limit your own exposure to images and messages that keep demeaning animals. Some would argue and say that seeing the worst of the worst helps build compassion and empathy. Largely, it only creates despair or anger. Despair and Anger about how animals are not loved and cared for on your planet will NOT elevate any of them, including yourselves. Positive, peaceful action is what will change the things which still need changing.

♥ A healing code for animals in captivity collectively is:
77 77 91 19 7777.

♥ A healing code for animals in shelters collectively is:
1111 5555 22 1.

To this point I suggest the following:

I invite each of you to employ a verbal healing ceremony to extend to some of the most aggressive, venomous, most dangerous, or what your world considers the ugliest of animals; and then to all animals used for human consumption. Continue this powerful healing to any and all which move you:

I offer love and kindness to the:

box jellyfish

cone snail

black mamba snake

cape buffalo of Africa

siafu ants

death stalker scorpion of African and the Middle East

puffer fish

hyena

venomous stonefish
poison dart frog of South and Central America poisonous inland taipan snake from Australia Brazilian wandering spider blue ringed octopus
king cobra
Africanized honey bee great white shark boom slang snake komodo dragon blood sucking tsetse fly carpet viper mosquito
warthog from Africa star nosed mole from Canada and North America goblin shark aye aye from Madagascar naked mole rat mega mouth shark
giant isopod, a crustacean related to shrimps and crabs ogre fish viper fish glass squid
pelican eel

Additionally, 10 powerful ways to support your pets and the rest of the animal kingdom during this time of ascendancy:

1. Let go of past expectations about what your pet can or can't do. Many of them, regardless of their ages, are more advanced than you know. They know more, they see more, they sense more than ever before since the passing of 2012.
2. Continue to provide them with more outside time. This is especially true for small domesticated animals that may be seen as house pets. House pets, more than any other animal companion, need more outside time in Mother Nature to restore, renew and replenish their upgrading DNA systems.
3. Find ways to become more creative with your interactions with your pets. They are hungry for this! Since 2012, they have newly replaced hard wiring just as many of their caregivers do. This internal hard wiring, of more highly charged magnetic field, simply connects them as it does each of you more fully with the crystalline grids of Mother Earth and, in so doing, empowers them (and each of you) with new found creativity. So, play a literal game of cat and mouse, and see how creative you can be. Their health literally depends upon it.
4. Globally, I am calling many to be in my light worker's army to elevate the abused animals of the world. So rise up, I say unto you, and get involved! If you already are presently involved in helping at an animal center, wildlife reserve or conservatory, become more involved!

5. Send love and kindness on a daily basis through your voice to any and all that still cause harm to the animal family. Include in your love and kindness ceremony those who unintentionally harm the animal kingdom, as well as those who have intent. Follow this spiritual teaching on a daily basis and you will have personally affected the health and well-being of dozens of systems. I ask that each of you expand this simple profound healing exercise for 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30 minutes every day, and see healing take place—even feel healing take place in the farthest reaches of the Amazonian Rainforest.
6. Select one cause, one sector of the planet where you know animal abuse is taking place, and demand the cessation of all imports from those in power of any animal skin, animal part, whether for medicinal or homeopathic use or physical adornment. The world needs these not.
7. Limit your consumption of meat. Work toward totally eliminating it from your diets. Instead, replace your food source with sustainable sources such as those found in super foods.
8. Teach them love. Yes, teach them love. Any animal on the face of the Earth has the capacity to love. How does one teach an animal to love? By showing it love. Do you yourselves know how to show love to yourselves? First you must love yourselves to give it to another. Begin today as if it were your first day to extend loving, nurturing gestures to yourselves, for before any healing can come to those you care for, you must first care for yourself.

9. Write yourself a love letter. In the love letter, write everything you love about yourself, everything you love about your animals, and everything you love about the animal kingdom, and then leave it on display. For some of you, you will write more than one love letter and permanently display more than one love letter. How marvelous! Every time a person or animal passes by a statement of love, energetic particles of love attach to them and to you!
10. Form new animal groups called “Animal Caring Societies”. Use the global kingdom to band together under this one umbrella to form the largest collective consciousness healing movement your planet has ever known for the animal kingdom. But don’t stop with the formation, dear souls. I would like to see a society formed on every continent on Earth, with subsets under each society like branches from a mighty Sequoia. Branch societies for the jaguar, for example, another society for the peacock, another branch of the main society to support the raccoon, the soft-shelled crab, and the yellow-belly sapsucker, and so on and so on and so on. Leave no animal out of the animal caring energy, including the most feared, the most hated or those extinct. Elevate your planet now!! Once and for all!!

P.S. Delight in teaching your children, your grandchildren, young nieces, nephews and students about the wonders of animals. Do what you can to diminish fear and increase love and understanding. Model compassion. Have them learn to identify the sounds of animals, animal contributions, animal tracks. Can anyone identify this animal print?

Q: Archangel Michael, in your “2012” book you mentioned at that time that animal abuse would be disbanding, is it? When can we expect to see the end to animal abuse once and for all?

A: As long as mankind’s greed exists, abuse will exist. Greed is the driving energy behind all abuse—it may not appear that way, but it is as I see it. When I present myself to the Council of 9 they say, “By 2020.” When I present myself to Master Jesus he says sooner. When I present myself in the Halls of Knowledge and examine all the charts, the timing looks like 2029.

Lastly, friends, until we meet again, allow me to suggest your involvement in a similar verbal healing ceremony stating,

"I am grateful for..." Any and all gratitude statements related to the animals opens the magnified heart centers of all. I, myself, Archangel Michael, am grateful for your growing compassionate hearts, and for your expanding efforts in ending animal abuse and in reading and sharing this book so that many nations, many languages all over the globe will be able to read and absorb what is contained here.

RISE UP! * BE STRONG! UNITE YOURSELVES WITH COMPASSION AND PATIENCE, FOR WHAT YOU THINK ABOUT, YOU CREATE. * YOUR AMMUNITION, MY FRIENDS, IS LOVE, LOVE AND MORE LOVE. *

Archangel Michael

Credits

"Snorkelers watching fish" by Julie aka Piper from Southern Michigan, USA - Flickr.
Licensed under CC BY-SA 2.0 via Commons
https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Snorkelers_watching_fish.jpg#/media/File:Snorkelers_watching_fish.jpg

Titicaca orestias: Source Trail.com

Jellyfish Image: Source: Wikipedia

Dolphin Image: Source: Wikipedia

Yak: By Dennis Jarvis [CC BY-SA 3.0 (<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-sa/3.0/>)], via Wikimedia Commons

Jumping rabbit photographed by Adrian Pingstone. (Own work) [GFDL
(<http://www.gnu.org/copyleft/fdl.html>) or CC-BY-SA-3.0
(<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-sa/3.0/>)], via Wikimedia Commons Source:
Wikipedia

"Redcrested Turaco" by Daniel Demczuk - Own work. Licensed under CC BY-SA 3.0
via Commons
<https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:RedcrestedTuraco.jpg#/media/File:RedcrestedTuraco.jpg>

Dove seal "Pax250" by Niccolo Machiavelli - 'Mission to Sienna, The Historical, Political, and Diplomatic Writings, vol. 3 (Diplomatic Missions 1498-1505) [1498].
Licensed under Public Domain via Wikimedia Commons
<https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Pax250.jpg#/media/File:Pax250.jpg>

Early cave drawing: By A,Ocrum (Own work) [CC BY-SA 3.0
(<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-sa/3.0/>)], Wikimedia Commons

Hummingbird: Mdf [GFDL (<http://www.gnu.org/copyleft/fdl.html>) or CC-BY-SA-3.0
(<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-sa/3.0/>)], via Wikimedia Commons

Egret Source: <http://www.scmp.com/news/china/article/1071429/poaching-wild-birds-threatens-some-species>

Baby Emu. Licensed under Public Domain via Wikimedia Commons - https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Baby_Emu.jpg#/media/File:Baby_Emu.jpg

Cave Painting Source: by Carla Hufstедler - originally posted to Flickr as 20,000 Year Old Cave Paintings: Hyena. Licensed under CC BY-SA 2.0 via Wikimedia Commons - https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:20,000_Year_Old_Cave_Paintings_Hyena.png#/media/File:20,000_Year_Old_Cave_Paintings_Hyena.png

Hippos: by Paul Maritz (Own work) [GFDL (<http://www.gnu.org/copyleft/fdl.html>) or CC-BY-SA-3.0 (<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-sa/3.0/>)], via Wikimedia Commons

Elephant Tiger Hunt by Samuel Howitt - Oriental Field Sports, Vol. I, by Thomas Williamson 1808. Drawn by Thomas Williamson & Samuel Howitt.. Licensed under Public Domain via Wikimedia Commons - <https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:ElephantbackTigerHunt.jpg#/media/File:ElephantbackTigerHunt.jpg>

Monkey: "Symphalangus syndactylus, Chiba Zoo, Japan" by suneko - <http://www.flickr.com/photos/suneko/373310729/>. Licensed under CC BY 2.0 via Wikimedia Commons https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Symphalangus_syndactylus,_Chiba_Zoo,_Japan.jpg#/media/File:Symphalangus_syndactylus,_Chiba_Zoo,_Japan.jpg

Centaur by User: Clicgauche (Own work) [Public domain], via Wikimedia Commons

About the Author

Kelly Hampton is an international spiritual leader and Alchemy teacher. She is a renowned author, angelic, ascended masters, inter-dimensional, elemental channel, and medium and animal communicator. She is the founder of multiple NEW 5th dimensional ground-breaking healing systems from Archangel Michael including STAR HEALING INTERGALACTIC ENERGY™, Star Healing Equine™, Star Healing for Small Animals™ and Ascended Spaces™ for creating abundance in your homes, also given to her by Archangel Michael. Kelly has assisted clients in completely releasing a huge range of physical and emotional ailments including all types of pain, anxiety, depression, fibromyalgia, addictions, allergies and many more through this powerful system given to her in 2010 for people as well as animals. She also trains students internationally through the power of the internet and in live workshops. She is also the founder of DOMINION, the new astrology-astronomy system for the New Millennium. Thousands of people and animals around the world have been helped or miraculously healed as a result of these powerful Ascension God-Source energy systems.

Kelly first saw the face of Christ in a glass of water at age 10, and near age 20 she was able to communicate with her mother on the other side. Later, she was awakened in the middle of the night in 2003 by Archangel Michael, who said they would be creating a book together. This resulted in Into The White Light: The Revelations of Archangel Michael. Since that time she has been conducting private sessions all over the world as well as teaching practitioners in these amazing systems given to her by Archangel Michael, Christ and other Ascended Masters. Through her other intensive training workshops and online programs, telesummit appearances, seminars, spiritual retreats and audio series, she elevates the human and planetary consciousness. She is also the author of 2012 And Beyond: The Truth from Archangel Michael and lives with her family in Missouri, USA. For further information regarding Kelly's work please visit www.kelly-hampton.com.

Are you missing out?

- ♥ Submit your personal animal stories and photographs of how you are helping the animals on our planet and how they are helping you to be considered for inclusion in The Book of Animals, Vol. 2!
- ♥ Sign up to receive Kelly's quarterly e-mail newsletter
- ♥ See where Kelly is conducting healing workshops
- ♥ See where Kelly is speaking at events
- ♥ Watch videos and interviews of Kelly
- ♥ Follow Kelly on Facebook at The Book of Animals by Kelly Hampton.
- ♥ Add your prayers for animals to Kelly's Facebook page dedicated for this purpose. You may also email your prayer requests and write to her at: kelly@kelly-hampton.com

